The Celtic Disposition As Seen By Mr. Copp—Claims Contradictory

(Article No. 10)
(Special to The Daily Mail)
Those of you who have crossed the Irish Sea from Holyhead to Kingstown with H. V. Morton in his "In Search of Ireland" will know more about those three hours than we can ever tell. To a remarkable degree we duplicated his recorded experiences, though, of course, in proportion to our lesser sensitivity, and perhaps we had a few that he did not have. Chiefly because our crossing was at a Bank Holiday week-end. There are I believe, four Bank Holidays in the English year, and they might be defined, simply, as days when everyone goes somewhere else!

Rev. John Copp

Our crowded steamer churned its way through the perfect calm of a sea, the Hill of Howth headland came up over the horizon, the light-ship "Kish" was on our right, and we coasted into Kingstown harbour. It was five in the afternoon. Men and women were sitting, standing, walking in the sun. The pier and breakwater are an integral part of the town. Small children were peering over the dockedge, watching the skilful manoeuvring of our pilot and vowing that one day they should walk the bridge of a great ship. Over the Customs House an Irish flag was flying, and later, at the luggage shelves below, the servants of this very, fraction Kingdom were exasperatingly patient in their questioning and their search.

On the way to the railway station, behind a striding porter, we had a chance to look about us. I noticed three irrelevant things: the letter boxes, red in England were, in this country, green; the faces and clothing along our route seemed to show more poverty than we had seen in England or Canada; and in the advertising space on the station walls and in the carriages there were many blanks. But in the advertisements that were there there was exhibited the same downright cleverness that we had seen in the sister Isle. In the example I remember, a meat merchant had borrowed one of the three little pigs, and had him tripping along on his

VATICAN DENIES SENDING MISSIONARIES TO CHINA TO FIGHT COMMUNISM

ROME, Oct. 15—The official paper of the Vatican last evening emphatically denied the assertion which appeared in certain portions of the press that Roman Catholic missionaries had been sent to China to aid in the fight against Communism.

It had been reported that the Holy See condones Japanese military activity in China wherever Communism appears to be the enemy.

This policy was said in well-informed Vatican quarters to represent a normal expansion of Pope Pius' increasingly militant campaign against Bolshevism. It was described as being in harmony with the Vatican's attitude toward the Spanish civil war and with the outspoken attacks on

'Honorable Shabbiness' Is Just a Headache To Jap Tailors

TOKIO, Oct. 15—Fifty Japanese tailors rushed into the offices of the Finance Ministry today to denounce the Government's recent policy of "honorable shabbiness" as a "patched pants" campaign.

Hammering on the desk of Vice-Minister Sotaro Ishiwatari, they shouted, "We have to live, too." Ishiwatari sighed in sympathy, but gave no assurance.

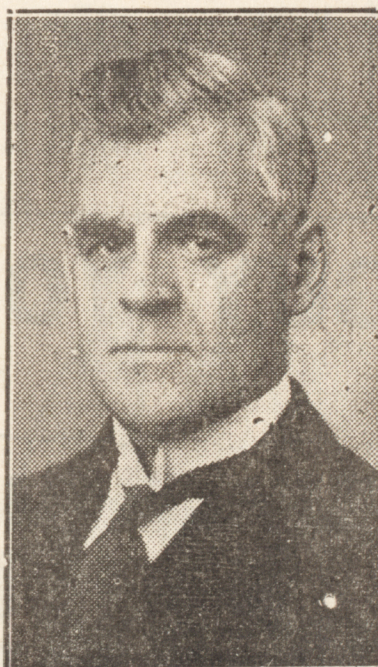

A group of prominent Japanese officials have announced intention to wear old clothes as a economy measure to aid in prosecuting the conflict with China.

Telephone Service

SOME WEEKS AGO The Daily Mail had occasion to refer to the very unsatisfactory telephone service given in connection with the local office in this city. Any person who has to use the telephone day after day cannot but be impressed by the inefficiency of the service. Whether this is the fault of mechanical arrangements at the telephone office or whether it is the fault of an inefficient staff we do not know. The young lady operators are obliging enough. We do know, however, that the large majority of citizens are complaining about the service which has been unsatisfactory for many months. Chief complaints are in regard to long delays in getting connections, or in getting a reply from the "central" when one takes the receiver off the hook, and the getting of wrong numbers time after time. Those who have business over the long distance receive a much more satisfactory service. In fact there is nothing to complain about in regard to the long distance service. The suburban service which is connected with the city exchange such as Lincoln, Oromocto, Burton and Manguerville, are particularly unsatisfactory. A man might almost as easily many times walk down to Burton as try to get proper connection by telephone.

IN REGARD TO THE LOCAL TELEPHONE SERVICE THE SUGGESTION IS MADE THAT IF THE DIAL SERVICE IN USE AT SAINT JOHN AND AT MANY OTHER UP-TO-DATE TOWNS AND CITIES WAS ADOPTED THAT THIS MIGHT ELIMINATE THE CONDITIONS WHICH ARE GENERALLY COMPLAINED ABOUT. This would only apply to the service in Fredericton and immediate vicinity but would not eliminate the difficulties in regard to the rural sections mentioned as it appears the trouble with the rural lines results from an altogether different reason. Particularly in down river sections the telephone rings are so arranged that there are so many short rings and so many long rings that a man has to figure out whether he has been called or not or else take a chance and answer the telephone when someone else is wanted. One telephone may have five short rings, another may have two long rings and three short ones, and still another may have three long ones and two short ones, and the man who has been called on any of these rings has to wait sometimes for a second call before he knows whether it is for him or not. Another unsatisfactory part of the rural service is that when a telephone rings everyone on the line can pick up the receiver and listen in and hear all about the other fellow's business. This is a rotten practice which many rural subscribers seem to think is all right and not dishonorable.

With the amount of money which the New Brunswick Telephone Company receives, this company ought to devise some ways and means of improving the service to its patrons. The company has a monopoly of the telephone business in this province and its directors should appreciate this fact and give the public satisfactory service so that it will not be necessary to make an appeal to the Public Utilities Commission, as has been suggested.

BRITAIN WANTS TO LIVE AT PEACE WITH NEIGHBORS, HAS NO SINISTER DESIGNS

LONDON, Oct. 15—The Prime Minister of Jugo Slovakia was entertained this afternoon by Neville Chamberlain at 11 Downing Street. This morning the visiting statesmen was a guest at Buckingham Palace.

Speaking before the members of the British Chambers of Commerce last evening Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain frankly declared the attitude of Britain in regard to other nations and neighboring countries. He also made clear the procedure that England would take if she were attacked.

England's proper function in relation to industry was to create conditions under which trade and commerce could most successfully be carried on, while exercising only "so much control as may be necessary in the public interest."

"The desire of Britain to live at peace with our neighbors" was the mainspring of Great Britain's foreign policy, he said.

"It is not in the temperament of our people to bear malice," he added, "and I think we have the shortest memory for quarrels of any nation in the world."

"Sometimes we are credited with more than a Machiavellian degree of cunning," the prime minister continued, "but the simple fact is that the mainspring of our foreign policy is the desire to live at peace with our neighbors and to use our influence to induce them, if we can, to resolve difficulties by peaceful discussions and not to resort to war."

"I doubt whether our foreign policy ever was less aggressive than it is today."

"Even as the voluntary system was best for the British defence forces," he said, "it was preferred to compulsion toward industry."

"We try to exercise the minimum control consistent with prevention of any abuse," he declared in outlining the government's attitude toward (Continued on Page Four)
