LAZY BONES, A PROBLEM TO A WEARIED MOTHER

Worried About What to do With Boy Who Likes All The Favors But Is Blind To The Chores and Location of the Woodpile

(By Arthur Dean, Sc.D.)

Dear Mr. Dean: My boy of 13 is strong and healthy and a fair student. But we have been unable to get him to take over any responsibility in the home. He joined the Boy Scouts, we outfitted him, and then because he didn't like camp and couldn't pass first aid, he dropped out. He decided that he wanted very much to take drum lessons; we got him a drum and started the lessons. He made progress for a while, joined an orchestra, but wouldn't practice his lessons. We give him 50 cents a week allowance, and for that amount he is supposed to be responsible for the garbage removal. But before he takes the garbage out we have to remind him.

"He claims that he forgot, but I have placed the garbage pail where it would be impossible for him to pass without seeing it. He would grumble if asked to go on any errands. He told us that if we would get him a bicycle he wouldn't mind going. We got the bike, but now he doesn't like to get the bike out of the cellar.

"Incidentally, he never forgets to ask for his allowance, particularly the part he is supposed to spend for amusements, candy and ice cream. In the last two or three years he has become interested in anything connected with war. He gets almost everything he can from the library on the subject, and hopes to go to West Point when he is old enough. We do not encourage him in this. Neither do we oppose him, hoping that this will also pass with the years.—A Weary Mother."

There are people who would excuse your boy by saying: "He is at the age when he is lazy and indolent and he will outgrow it." I will grant there is an age when some boys like to be taken care of by their parents, without any effort on their own part and like to stay in bed until mother threatens to throw cold water over them and will do work around the house only after they have discovered what there is in it for them.

Like your boy they never forget to ask for an allowance and they can walk past the woodpile, the garbage pail or the coal hod and never see them.

Why not use the boy's interest in war by showing him that war is primarily discipline, planning and co-operation? Everyone has his part to do. If the sanitary corps forgot to take away the garbage pails every day there would be an epidemic. If the officers forgot, attacks would be made on time.

Build up his interest in right things by talking with him about things in which he is interested.

It is natural for boys to try out various hobbies, and when these hobbies don't run too much into money it is a good idea. But I would not have him try out any more musical instruments, or go into any more musical ventures without knowing whether he was going to stay by. "Mother won't allow me to go to any parties or entertainments unless I take my 14 year old sister along. But Sis always repeats every word she hears. Not that I'm ashamed of my actions, but she tells of every move I make until I'm disgusted. How can my parents learn to trust me without making me take a little sister along.—Miss Sixteen."

That is surely embarrassing. Your folks don't send your sister along as a tale bearer. They simply want her to share in your pleasures. Usually a girl is willing to share her social and recreational life with a younger sister until she is about 13. After that, NO, for the next seven years. The answer is primarily for parents.

THE TRUTH IN TWICE-TOLD TALES

(By Ruth Cameron)

What a gap there is sometimes between what we say on certain occasions and what we say we said afterward!

Even those of us who are naturally truthful and haven't the slightest idea of lying, do it!

I think myself it's because of a confusion between actuality and wishful thinking. One merging on the other so imperceptibly that we really don't realize that we are shaping our conversation more near to the heart's desire than to the truth.

A very common type of this kind of romantic reporting is the "what I said to the boss" type.

Every man is a lion in his relations to the boss, when he is telling his best girl or some impressionable friend about it. Sometimes even when he is telling his wife, but less commonly so.

Says he: "And I said, 'Oh, yeah! If you can find plenty of men to do the work at less money, just go out and try it. I'll be glad to hand over the job. I don't see myself burning myself up the way I do for any less than I'm getting now.'"

At which, of course, the boss backed down and withdrew his suggestion of a cut.

Of course, the audience to whom this romantic tale is told, applauds, verbally. But what is it (most likely she) thinking inside? Possibly, "Isn't he a wonderful man?" Probably, "I wonder what he did really say?"

That prized American institution known as the "snappy comeback" is also the subject of much romantic reporting. The thing we should have said in some situation calling for such comeback gradually becomes the thing we really did say.

I caught myself at it the other day or rather, was caught at it. I was telling of an amusing situation which had arisen, and I reported what I said, when a relative brutally pricked the bubble of my wit by saying: "Was that what you really said?"

I thought a minute, and realized I had altered a few words, not more than a half dozen, but enough to put the snap into the snappy comeback, which I hadn't really made. I had quoted, not what I really said, but the thing I would have said if I had had time to frame my answer or had been one of those quick-witted

Cook Book Code

The cook book speaks a language of its own—too often a strange, foreign language we do not understand. How often have we started a recipe, just to be disturbed in the middle of it, by some cryptic phrase we cannot decipher? Clip this cook book code and paste it in the front of your recipe file. It will come in handy often.

A la broche—Cooked on a skewer.
Aspic—A stiff meat jelly of piquant flavor.

An gratin—With browned crumbs.

Hors d'Oeuvres—Appetizers.
Jardiniere—Mixed vegetables.

people who give off such sparkles instantly.

I guess it's a form of fiction that we all write or speak. Doesn't do any harm probably, and sublimates our egos. But I think it does us good to catch ourselves now and then. Gives us a sense of proportion and of sharing in the absurdities of the well known human race.

EVENING COAT OF WHITE LAMBSKIN

This Fur, Tinted Rose and Other Tones To Blend With Fall Colors — Dyed and Shaved Both Used.

PARIS—Woolly lambs will make their bow to society this winter, making no apology to the minks, ermine and silver fox they will meet in exclusive entertainment centres, for Paris designers have made them into some of the most intriguing of afternoon and evening wraps.

Vera Borea uses a creamy lambskin for a full-length evening coat of classic design. Nipped in at the waist, the wrap is made with high revers and no collar. The sleeves stop at the elbow and the skirt is designed with a graceful flare to the floor.

A white lambskin jacket with woolly round sleeves is bound with deep blue velvet to match a skirt in Chaney's collection, and she also uses the soft white fur for a daytime coat with black vest and matching white hat.

There is a reversible cape of dyed lamb, and shaved lamb makes a three-quarter coat with panelled back and belted front in the collection of Max furs where an Indian lamb is made into an oyster-hued swaggar coat with cartridge pleats across the back.

There is a feeling of cozy warmth in the thick white fur, which blends with the season's spirit of luxury, but some of the designers tint it a rich shade to blend with colors of an ensemble. Schiaparelli tints lambskin in her new "sultry rose" hue to line a black open coat, and Madeleine de Rauch dyes it to blend with costumes in her collection.

Paquin makes woolly lambskin swaggar coats and Jenny chooses a golden Argentine lamb for one of her most successful daytime coats. One house shows a handsome evening coat of brown dyed lambskin, sleeveless and straight-lined.

X-Ray Treatment Of Disease

The X-ray has become so important in our lives that most people would be interested to know the history of the discovery of this important aid in diagnosing and treating disease.

About 50 years ago, scientists found that when they passed an electric spark through a tube from which the air was removed, the spark developed three kinds of rays. One of these types of rays was called X-ray.

The amazing discovery was then made that these rays could pass through various objects. The more solid or dense the object, the more difficult it was for the rays to go through. For example, if the hand was placed between the X-ray and a photographic plate, the bones would show up darker on the plate because they were more solid or more dense than the flesh and blood.

You can see why the X-ray became important in learning of conditions in the body. It is a way of taking pictures of the inside of the body.

Soon, a new means of diagnosis was developed, and the specialists in that field are known as roentgenologists, so named after the man who was the pioneer of X-rays, Roentgen.

In recent years we have learned that X-rays have certain curative properties. That is, they seem to have a beneficial effect in the treatment of certain diseases as well as in diagnosing disease. "Treatment of infection with X-ray brings prompt relief from pain and is effective in shortening the course of the infection," is the statement made by Dr. Willis F. Manges, of Philadelphia, who recently died. He claimed that treatment with X-ray had not had the attention it should have, and that X-ray should be used more widely for treating various disorders.

Boils, infections around the nails, abscesses, erysipelas, infection of the alveolar glands, sinus infections, pneumonia and even tuberculosis, particularly tuberculosis infection of the salivary glands, sinus infections, often benefited by X-ray treatment.

The usual treatment of a boil or similar infection, in the past, has been to use heat, applied by means of cloths wrung out in hot water, or in other ways. Instead, Dr. Manges said the first step in the treatment should be the use of the X-ray. This will either cause the infection to disappear rapidly, or it will make the infection come to a head more quickly, so that it may be opened, and the infected material allowed to drain out. Patients who feel sick, as a result of infections, seem to get rapid relief, and feel better more quickly when they are treated with X-rays.

CARRY YOUR ALKALIZER WITH YOU ALWAYS

The fastest way to "alkalize" is to carry your alkalizer with you. That's what thousands do now that genuine Phillips' comes in tiny, peppermint flavored tablets—in a flat tin for pocket or purse. Then you are always ready.

Use it this way. Take 2 Phillips' tablets—equal in "alkalizing" effect to 2 teaspoonfuls of liquid Phillips' from the bottle. At once you feel "gas," nausea, "over-crowding" from hyper-acidity begin to ease. "Acid headaches," "acid breath," over-acid stomach are corrected at the source. This is the quick way to ease your own distress—avoid offense to others.
