TOURISTS, AND LAMB

THE far-reaching influence of tourists in Canada on the commercial and agricultural interests of the Dominion was revealed today in a report on Canadian lamb conditions issued by A. A. MacMillan, associate field services chief of the live stock branch, Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Tourists, according to Mr. MacMillan's report, have made it necessary for farmers in central and eastern Canada to re-arrange their sheep breeding schedules so that lambs might be born earlier in the spring in order to meet the heavy market demand created for fresh lamb by touring visitors in Canada during the summer and fall months.

"From all parts of Canada," Mr. MacMillan's report states, "we have received information that fresh lamb is considered a most delicious and appetizing meat by tourists and visitors during the summer and early autumn. Farmers, particularly in Ontario and Quebec, are taking steps to make sure that lambs are born earlier in the spring and brought up to 80 to 100 pounds at the farm on fresh, tender pasture, so that advantage may be taken of the large potential market outlet which tourists create from June to October each year."

In Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island, the survey points out, fresh lamb dinners now vie with fish dinners in point of popularity with tourists from other parts of Canada and from the United States.

THE DANGER OF SEPARATISM

EVERY CANADIAN citizen loyal to his country realizes how great is the need of unity among all sections of the population and is made to tremble when any expressions of disunity or separatism are made. In the Province of Quebec, of late, such expressions have been made, but it ought not to be thought that these expressions represent a general feeling. There are leaders of the French-speaking minority in Canada who see the peril in any movement toward separatism and who declare themselves quite forcibly. Writing in the University of Ottawa Review, Father Georges Simard, O.M.I., says: "After having lived nearly forty years in Ontario and in the Capital of Canada, and having followed or served so many of our sacred causes, I would consider myself guilty of impertinence and treason if I declared in a centre like Ottawa that I adhere to a current of ideas which, if it should succeed at once, would involve in ruin the results obtained by many years of common effort and sacrifice."

A great service can be rendered the country by others like Father Simard who are ready to declare similar convictions.—(Citizen).

RECKLESS DRIVING

THE Halifax Herald recently had the following editorial:

The suggestion of Winnipeg's Chief of Police, presented at the annual convention of the Chief Constables' Association of Canada, namely, the enactment of a law "compelling automobile manufacturers to equip cars with governors that would not permit them to travel over 50 miles an hour," contains a great deal of merit.

Statistics, painstakingly compiled, clearly show that undue speeding is the most prolific cause of motor accidents and fatalities.

"Reckless driving at 60 and 70 miles per hour is all too common, frequently resulting in disaster."

But, it must be remembered that the culprit in the case is not the motor—but the man. It is the personal equation that is all important, not the mechanical speed possibility of the car.

A modern automobile is a powerful machine, highly dangerous in the hands of an incompetent driver or a reckless speedster, but legislation designed to offset traffic accidents must, to be effective, first deal with the offender—the incapable and the reckless.

The slaughter that is going on on the highway is due to more than one fault. We agree that the driver is most often to blame; but every man who ever drove a car knows that in towns and cities at least, foot passengers are often to blame, and some of them put themselves in a position where the most careful driver can hardly avoid doing them an injury.

But it remains true that drivers usually make their own difficulties. Even on town streets they go faster than any necessity can possibly require. Considering that this country got along nicely for generations with vehicles which could not be made to go faster than a few miles a hour, the fury of speed which we see about us on all sides now is plainly unnecessary; and, being at the same time dangerous to the public safety ought to be rigidly repressed.

It will be repressed. The only question is how much more slaughter is to be allowed to take place before the speeders have it impressed on them that the roads belong to the people and that the people must be protected.

Meantime, we are in some danger of getting hardened and indifferent to the daily occurrence of death on the highways. We suggest that observers be placed at selected points between two towns, out of sight, and the numbers taken and the parties prosecuted and punished in a manner that they will not immediately forget. Give those proceedings publicity, and you will have done more in a day for public safety than a year's talking. Nothing else will do. The slaughter will go on unless this is done. The question must be answered sooner or later. If the Motor Vehicle Act is not to be enforced, repeal it.

SNAPSHOTS

The man who is spending his little savings on a prolonged spree should not keep the neighbours awake every night. He is too near the principal business street to carry on his nightly groanings and shoutings in private. He should be taken in hand by his friends and be stopped from annoying the public including many strangers to the city.

The ordinary woman doesn't envy another who "marries rich" unless it's her sister.

A man's little weaknesses make his wife feel sorry for him; a wife's little weaknesses make a man feel sorry for himself.

or distant future. Neither were any decisions reached on the policy the party will pursue in Parliament at the next session or the platform it will lay before the people at the next election.

The meeting was held on the seventh anniversary of Mr. Bennett's entry into office as prime minister, following his victory at the 1930 general election. He has been leader for 10 years and is 67 years old. For five of his ten years at the head of the party he was prime minister.

Ever since he suffered a serious illness in the winter of 1935 the possibility of Mr. Bennett's retirement has been talked about. He recovered from the illness sufficiently to put up a fighting defence of his administration in the 1935 election, but went down to defeat in a landslide which gave the Liberal party the largest parliamentary majority in history.

Since the election the leader's health had not been as good as he wished and prior to leaving for the coronation last May, he informed his followers he would consult with European medical specialists and be guided by their advice as to his future activities.

Now in the light of their advice and with an improvement in health he is willing to carry on the task of leading the opposition in Parliament and heading the party throughout the country.
