Another Avoidable Tragedy

AMELIA EARHART PUTNAM, who did as much as any other flier to convince the public of the safety of flying, dared fate once too often. The tragic end of "Lady Lindy" once again raises the question of restricting "excursions" over uncharted routes. There was a day when every long-distance flight involved greater risks than Mrs. Putnam and Captain F. J. Noonan were taking. They were actual pioneering, necessary in collecting the data on which aviation has fed and grown. And while every long-distance flight does not contribute something to the experience column in the ledger, aviation has gone beyond flying "for the fun of it."

While it is doubtful that such tragedies do anything to discredit aviation's record, what they cost in life and money is needless waste. What has been spent on searching the South Pacific would enable any of the commercial companies to chart the whole Pacific Ocean in comparative safety. When Pan American Airways inaugurated the San Francisco-Manilla service, months were used for the preparations. During the test flights emergency ships were located all along the route. It was possible for the Clipper's crew to know weather conditions almost every mile of the way. The craft itself was designed to survive an emergency landing, and every element of risk, so far as humanly possible, was eliminated.

The precautions that have gone into preparing the North and South Atlantic services; Germany's years of research and test flying across the South Atlantic to South America; the British and Dutch regular services to their Empire outposts, all of these have been accomplished without a serious mishap of any kind. It has been said by some experts that Mrs. Putnam and her navigator were negligent in not having their radio adjusted to permit communication with Pacific shipping; that had they done so they would have been better able to state their approximate position. That may or may not have been the case, but whatever prevented the tragedy proves again the futility of unnecessary risks.

Any publicity Amelia Earhart could get from the flight she could have had from flying between any two American cities. She had built herself an enviable reputation as a flier, and she got the publicity whether she liked it or not. The most that can be said is that the flight was not necessary, and the loss is by no means accounted for once naval authorities have determined the cost of the search. Who can say what Amelia Earhart and her navigator have contributed to the business of flying?

Our Doors Need Guarding

THE charge that George Roediger, convicted bigamist, had a criminal record in Germany before coming to this country ought to move the immigration authorities to thought. Hauptmann, convicted of kidnapping and slaying the Lindbergh child, was also shown to have a bad record in his native country, but he entered the United States by subterfuge and there was no opportunity to check up his past. The coincidence in the nationality of the two men means nothing, obviously, but both were foreigners who brought crime to their adopted countries. Roediger's life could have been investigated, and, in view of what has happened, should have been.

A nation has no more responsible privilege than guarding its doors against undesirable citizens and visitors. It is not too much to require all who enter to come with indisputable proof of clean hands, and it would be to the credit of the country to let it be known that deportation is easily invoked if evil traits develop or hospitality is abused.

When so much emphasis is placed on the economic side of immigration there should be room for stress on the moral side. The community has an obligation to prevent the growth of crime. It has a greater obligation to halt its importation.

This applies to more than the lone criminal. Citizens are entitled to protection from organized crime, including racketeering of all kinds. When we put the onus on the entrant to prove that his record and his associations are beyond criticism our troubles will be greatly reduced. A policy of waiting to see what happens is treachery toward the people.

The First Sensible Idea

REPORTS that the advisory experts on Social Credit now favor postponing the Alberta experiment is about the best thought any of the theorists have had to date. It is the only idea credited to any of them that offers a glimmer of hope for Alberta's financial problems.

Admittedly there has been much wrangling over whether or not Alberta has yet proposed true Social Credit. The Douglas school, including the same experts, maintains it has not. In the light of two years of ruinous legislation and administrative bungling, it is a most natural thing for them to maintain. It's their child.

But whether or not Premier Aberhart got down to the fundamentals of the plan is not the real issue. No one can deny or cover up the havoc his Government created in its efforts to prepare for their application. It is also beyond refutation that those fundamentals require more and bigger doses of the same things. More repudiation, more interference with public and private finance, with interest, with debts, with business.

Since it is Major Douglas's experts who have advised postponement it is all the more difficult to believe that Premier Aberhart is determined to go on. Here, ready-made, out of the wisdom of the high priests of the new Utopia, is the escape he has been searching for. It was too much to expect him to take that advice from the "agnostics." But these experts journeyed all the way to Alberta to study his difficulties, heal the party rupture and advise on a solution.

He now has the chance to get rid of the nonsense of the past two years and get down to the business of repairing the damage. Many offers of the assistance and co-operation Alberta needs still hold good. If he is not big enough for the job, there are doubtless men around him who, at least have the courage to try.

GREAT BRITAIN

Mussolini practically shattered Britain's last chance plan for saving the nonintervention project yesterday when Grandi informed representatives of eight other key powers that Italy refused to discuss withdrawal of foreign volunteers from Spain.

France and Russia refused to consider recognition of Generalissimo Francisco Franco's Nationalist Provisional Government as a belligerent until all foreign soldiers have been withdrawn from Spain—particularly Italian German troops fighting with the insurgents.

Eden was believed to have prevailed upon both Corbin and Grandi to ask their governments to reconsider their stands. Corbin and Ivan Maisky the Russian Ambassador, have instructions to oppose Italy's and Germany's belligerency demands.

There is some hope, after Grandi called at the Foreign Office, that Mussolini might be 'climbing down' from his position, but there was no official announcement to that effect.

It was reported in some circles that London might agree to discuss the Eden compromise plan in the chronological order demanded by Dino Grandi if Rome would admit that evacuation of foreign troops must be given priority over the granting of belligerent status to the Spanish factions. Italy has insisted that there is no dependence between the two questions.

READY FOR

In from most cities in Western Canada already and because these have been received so early I believe this year's event will be our greatest," declared Mr. Somerville today. Under the careful manuring of greenskeeper, Bill Drinkworth, the course came through the winter perfectly and is in its best condition in history. Every fairway is beautifully grassed and the greens are as fine as a set of velvet carpets to be found anywhere on the continent. Among the pleasing changes the golfers will find this year is a new green at the 18th. Last fall the old type bent was taken out and the new Clarkson bent was substituted. The magnificent character of the hole was not changed a whit in the alteration, but in re-establishing the surface two putting levels were carefully and skilfully worked in so that now practically the entire surface of this 12,000 square feet of green is available for placing of the cup. One of the main threats this year promises to come from Seattle as golfers from that city have not yet been successful, although last year they reached the semi-finals. Their plan this year is to take the famous silver Totem Pole back to the Pacific Coast for its first view of Puget Sound from the United States side of the border. Jack Starky of Edmonton, present holder of the trophy and only golfer to share with Gardener White of New York the distinction of having won the trophy twice has not yet been heard from although when the names are put in to the hat for the qualifying round draw, it is almost a certainty that this will be amongst those present as he has played in practically every tournament.

EXPECTS TO

until new stimulating influences become effective next autumn.

In the flood of recent bad wheat news from Saskatchewan favorable information regarding other western industries is too liable to be overlooked. Wheat growing is of major importance throughout the Prairie Provinces and the total yield this year is going to be distinctly disappointing, but there are other industries which as in other parts of the Dominion have been making good progress.

According to the Industrial Development Board of Manitoba 80% of Winnipeg's industries have shown increases in employment and 70% increases in output in the first half of the current year compared with 1936. Average increase in output is estimated at 15%. Even in wheat, prospects point to good yields in Manitoba and fair to good harvests in Alberta. Late crops stimulated by recent rains promise generous supplies of livestock feed this fall and winter even in most of Saskatchewan. As a result, retail business in the three Prairie Provinces is expected to be probably as good as in 1936.

WAITERS

carried his 11 bags from the station to the Royal York Hotel.

"Not really!" said Mr. Noel. "I am glad I know of that. It is little things like that that cause a feeling of enmity."

Mr. Noel is President of the City Business Club, Glasgow. His visit in Canada, he says, is purely for pleasure, though he admits that he and the other business men with him are keeping their eyes open for immigration prospects. He is strong on the idea that Canada should take more Scottish people.

"Scotland is the black spot of Britain so far as unemployment goes," he said, "there's a boom at present due to armament building—but how long is it going to last? No one can tell."

People preparing for shelter in case of war? You won't find a gas mask in Glasgow, he said. The Scottish people aren't taking the threat of war seriously. They feel so far away from London and they're content to leave everything safely in the hands of the Government.

Shipbuilding Hums
But shipbuilding on the Clyde is going on at a furious pace. They can't get enough steel to meet the demands. Orders pour in from all over the world. And they're not for battleships only, says Mr. Noel. Commercial vessels are just as much on the list.

Business conditions in Scotland? Well, says Mr. Noel. It used to make Scottish people fairly boil when their own millionaires were ready to invest in any wild-cat scheme so long as it came from London.

"They wouldn't spend their money in their own land," he said, "but they would risk it on any English venture. That has changed. They are investing in Scottish industries now. The plan to attract industries by offering them sites free of rates has been successful."

Officials Embarrassed
Pino has been ordered by the President to investigate thoroughly all facts connected with the alleged discovery. Authorities here, who officially confirmed the find after receiving reports from provincial officials, were at a loss to understand how two police captains and the Governor of Chiriqui were able to announce the discovery without any basis in fact. So convinced was the Government that the treasure existed, that a tri-motor transport plane was sent to David, capital of Chiriqui, to fly the gold here for safe keeping.

MANY ATTEND

Following the service, which was fully choral, under the direction of Ralph S. Horsman, organist and choirmaster, the body was taken to the Union Depot. Interment will be made at Montreal.

A long and sorrowful procession accompanied the body to the depot. In the lead were two members of the Saint John police force, followed by the cross-bearer; then came the choir, fully vested—the acolytes, Rev. Canon J. V. Young, the hearse and pallbearers, who were, Canon Lawrence, Rev. H. C. Hoyt, rector at Gagetown; Rev. H. H. Hoyt, rector of East Saint John; Rev. J. McCann, rector at Musquash; Rev. Norman P. Fairweather, rector of St. Judas, West Saint John and Rev. B. T. Keith, rector at St. George. They had attended Bishop's College, Lennoxville, Quebec, while Father Goodfellow was there as a divinity student. Following the pallbearers came the trustees and congregation.

TAKE THE HEAT ON HIGH

(or Keep In High Gear This Summer)

WHEN the heat comes, some people, like old cars, can't make the grade—they have to slip into "second" or into "low". The heat slows them, saps their "horsepower". Why can I, a youngster of almost 80, who, judged by conventional standards, should be on the scrap heap, drive in high through the hottest summer, defying Mr. Sol, just as in winter I scorn Mr. Zero? The answer is foods. People give no thought at all to the foods they ought to eat, only the foods they like. They follow the herd. Herd intelligence is notably no intelligence at all.

If people would really think, they would realize that bodily health depends upon the blood that feeds the body cells. The blood depends upon the kind of foods which build the blood. Therefore the kind of blood that flows through our bodies can make us shrivel and shiver on cold days and wilt and wither on hot days. The cause of both is viscid, ropy, toxic blood, derived from denatured, dead, demineralized, constipating foods.

Here is how to prove me right or wrong. During the hot spell, make your breakfast of Roman Meal, Bekus-Puddy or Lishus, all you can enjoy with milk or cream, raisins or chopped dates, not body-heating sugar. Make thick enough to chew thoroughly. If hot cereal is not liked, cook any of them the previous night, allow to cool, place in refrigerator and serve for breakfast, with sliced or canned peaches, ripe bananas, fruit jelly, preserve, or honey with cream or milk. Drink iced Kofy-Sub, sweetened with brown sugar, or preferably honey, added while hot, a very delightful and healthful beverage. For noon meal a salad of fresh fruit or raw vegetables, iced Kofy-Sub. For evening meal, a large fruit or vegetable salad, sprinkled with grated nuts, gratings of cheese or cottage cheese, or lightly steamed vegetables if salads are not liked, as second choice. Any kind of juicy fruit for dessert. Iced Kofy-Sub or hot Kofy-Sub if hot drink is preferred.

Train the intestines to eliminate after each meal. It is of utmost importance to exercise all groups of muscles briskly, fifteen or twenty minutes daily, to the point of deep breathing, to burn up internal poisonous waste. If you do not know how, send fifty cents for my book "SYSTEMATIZED
