HON. DR. ROBERTS ADVISES AGAINST UNNECESSARY CAR TRAVEL AT PRESENT

Opening of Schools May Be Postponed To Later Date

Normal Opening Also Delayed

Can't Arrange Curricula at Present — Loss To This City $12,000 Per Week

Speaking to The Daily Mail over the telephone today, Hon. Dr. W. F. Roberts stated that in his opinion the prevention of infantile paralysis in this province rested in a large measure with the people themselves. While it is the duty of the health deparment and the Department of Education to keep the schools closed this movement will be minimized to a large extent by the people moving about from one part of the province to another in cars. These people might easily be carriers of the disease and might innocently and unconsciously transmit the disease from one part of the province to the other. In these days when places are brought closely together by means of the automobile, all due precautions should be observed by those who can easily move from one place to another, The conditions today are much changed from what they were in bygone years when it was not so easy for peonle to move from place to place This had all to be considered in connection with the present

FORMER SPEAKER COMMONS PASSES AT MONTREAL

Distinguished Lawyer, Scholar, Confrere of Wilfrid Laurier

MONTREAL, Sept. 29-A friend and collaborator of the late Sir Wilfred Laurier has passed away in the person of Senator Rodolphe Lemieux. Senator Rodolphe Lemieux, cabinet confrere of the late Sir Wilfred Laurler, and former Speaker in the Canalian House of Commons of which h was a member nearly 35 years, died at his home today in his seventysecond year.

The distinguished lawyer and veteran parliamentarian who was elected to the House first in 1896, became sion of the date of opening beyond serious ill five days ago with a kidney ailment from which he had been sufstood that the schools will not be fering five years. # A Policeman's Duty

POLICEMAN'S BUSINESS WHEN ON DUTY is the protection of life and property. In an emergency even when his life is in danger he is supposed to act on an impulse of courage and to protect those whom he is called upon to protect even at times at the risk of his own life. If he is properly trained he will recognize this duty and act accordingly. Policemen everywhere at some time or other come suddenly face to face with desperate situations involving death or bodily injury. They must act promptly without considering personal danger. This applies especially to larger cities but at times it applies even to small cities such as Fredericton, as an incident which took place in this city a couple of months ago goes to show.

Great disasters, whether on land or sea, bring out the ingrained heroism that lies dormant in the best of humanity. With other lives in peril, courageous individuals, at risk of their own, leap at once into action. Certain death may await them, but there is no thought of that. As with the soldier in the midst of carnage, "theirs not to reason why, theirs but to do and die."

Add to the ever-lengthening list of heroes the name of Patrolman Joseph McBreen. When a tenement house and other dwellings on Staten Island, New York, collapsed a few days ago during a deluge of rain, nineteen persons lost their lives, and there was a scene of horror and wild confusion. Three hundred firemen and policemen were rushed to the wreck. Here, in brief, pathetic language, is the story of Joseph McBreen's work;

"Patrolman Joseph McBreen, first rescuer on the scene, died a hero. He entered the second building a few moments after the first had collapsed about 11 o'clock last night. As he disappeared from view the walls creaked ominously, then toppled, burying more victims. Rescuers found McBreen's body hours later, his arm around the body of a child."

There is nothing to add to this terse, eloquent chronicling of a courageous act. "His arm around the body of a child!" Patrolman McBreen challenged death itself that a little child might live, but both are gone.

If additional pathos were needed it is provided by the fact that in a neighboring hospital, within hear Joseph McBreen's wife and a week-old-son. There is some link between the quiet courage of motherhood and this inherent heroism

There is another thought in this tragedy, James McBreen was a trained policeman, and in addition to his inherent heroism was the thought that his business as a policeman included the protection of life and property. In a shocking emergency he acted instantly on the impulse of courage.
