FREDERICTON, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 1937

Fredericton's Good Showing

Citizens of Fredericton should appreciate the work of the present City Council and the fact that the budget brought down at City Hall by Mayor Kitchen on Monday night shows a surplus of $891. While this is not a large amount it is comparatively large for a city like Fredericton and it shows good business management on the part of the Fredericton City Council. In addition to this surplus the funded debt of the city was reduced by about eight thousand dollars.

When many cities and towns and municipalities throughout the land are struggling to make ends meet and are going behind, it is a satisfaction to know that the City of Fredericton has done so well.

In addition to the financial showing made by the city the population shows an increase since 1931 of over thirteen hundred people.

Business Calls Halt on Hitler

Germany, by and large, is a factory, importing raw materials, converting them into manufactured goods and selling the goods largely abroad. Under Hitler's programme, first, use of imported raw materials is for armament. Second, imported materials are used to construct plants and machinery to make substitutes for imports. A poor third use of imports is to make goods for export.

A pretty plan by a politician it was, but now come German business men who ask Hitler an unanswerable question—how can goods be made for export when the bulk of the imported raw material is used for arms? And, bear in mind, the raw materials cannot be bought without exporting manufactured goods to pay for them.

Hitler is ducking the issue but he cannot avoid it long. Nobody is going to send raw materials to Germany unless payment is in sight. Worst of all, Great Britain's determination to build up her war machine has brought further dismay to Germans who see clearly that Germany cannot compete now that Great Britain has made up her mind to enter an arms race.

Politicians, and this includes dictators, have grand ideas of how to achieve their economic ambitions. The heads of many of these gentlemen are so full of theory that the time inevitably arrives when cold facts throw them for a loop.

Herr Hitler has arrived on a spot where neither his oratory nor his gunmen can purge the picture of an obstacle incapable of fear—the simple arithmetic of the facts.

Good-Will That Counts

The Canada-United Kingdom agreement has been welcomed in Great Britain as a new and better deal in reciprocal trade. It is accepted as evidence of Canada's wish to play the game fairly for closer relations and commercial expansion. That such a gesture should be necessary in associations between the Mother Country and the senior Dominion is fundamentally wrong. Existence of mutual good-will of the strongest sort ought not to be open to question. Yet development of conditions has been such as to arouse doubts, and it is gratifying that practical assurance is given at frequent intervals. No people appreciate this more than Britishers, and no others are readier to respond to the open hand. Canada does well whenever she recognizes her best friend.

"A nation of shopkeepers" and business is called bold-blooded! However true, it is not cold-blooded shopkeeping altogether that provided the Dominion with a favorable trade balance exceeding $1,600,000,000 in the last 10 years of commercial exchange. Much of it was due to deep-rooted kindness toward the kin across the sea. We cannot afford to overlook this. Although a trade agreement may hurt here and there, the important stake is the general results. Britain values our good-will, and certainly we have every reason to value hers.

Probably any period in a nation's life can be called critical, but it is evident that at the present time the use Canada makes of the good-will spirit can count for a great deal. The British Government had ample excuse for driving a harder bargain, considering the lopsided nature of accounts, but chose to let bygones be bygones. We are therefore on a new footing which ought to be capitalized to the limit. Canadian producers and exporters should lose no time in organizing for an increased volume of steady business, giving more attention to study of British markets and how demands can be met. British exporters ought to come to Canada and plan selling campaigns, and Canadians should co-operate with them. If adequate contacts are established and maintained we may even see a revival of pre-war investments for Dominion development, as Old Country investors are confronted with the fact that additional capital is not being welcomed in the States. This unusual situation may, quite conceivably, be turned to our advantage, if we remember that good-will plus opportunities count.

Mr. Dunning pointed out in his Budget address that the credit balance in trade, including gold, amounted to $452,000,000 and that to this could be added estimate net tourist revenue of $165,000,000, a total of $617,000,000. Are the figures too large to grasp? Do they not earn a very substantial measure of good-will on our part?

Most of our tourist trade, obviously, comes from the United States. What is not so well known—and is almost hard to believe—is that we now have a favorable visible trade balance with the same country. In the last calendar year we sold Uncle Sam $47,690,000 worth of goods more than we bought. In January the balance was increased by $1,886,000. Moreover, in the year the United States surpassed Britain by nearly $17,000,000 as our best customer. This is Canada's fortunate position, the result of good-will and good neighborliness—and another reason why we should continue to cultivate the friendliness of tourists.

Having the two foremost trading nations as our best customers gives outlets for a great variety of surplus products. Two-thirds of our exports to the United Kingdom consisted of products of the farm. Nearly 70 per cent. of the exports to the United States came from the woods and mines. While saying this, we need not forget that the Empire as a unit is a better customer than any single nation, and that the British market is always dependable when others fluctuate with political fortune.

This is where we stood at the beginning of 1937. If we continue to cultivate good-will we have a chance to be much further along at the opening of another year.

Mr. Strom has just finished his tenth year as director of the Lake Placid ski school and is on his way west to open his lodge at Mount Assinaboine near Banff for the six weeks of skiing remaining at his camp 7,200 feet up in the Rockies.

A competitive skier of repute in his younger days, though possibly better known now as the man who climbed Mount McKinley in Alaska on skis, Strom was enthusiastic over Kolterud's chances, in an interview Monday in the Windsor Station office of A. O. Seymour, general tourist agent, C.P.R.

"Kolterud should be a sensation," said Erling Strom. "He has been a leading competitor in Norway for many years, having represented the country on two Olympic teams and being a winner of the cup presented by the ladies for the best jumper, and class, in the famous Holmenkollen tournament in Norway. He was invited to the United States to exhibit in the winter sports show in Madison Square Garden where he was a sensation. There and in United States competitions since the show closed he had done remarkably well.

"Although he specializes in jumping and cross country, he is about equally good in downhill and slalom. If there was a system of combining the four types of competitive skiing, I don't know of a man in the world who could touch him."

It was announced that the original appropriation of $50,000 for the United States pavilion had been increased to a sum four times larger. One of the main celebrations during the summer at the American pavilion will be a historical pageant staged on July 4.

Forty-nine nations have announced that they will take part in the exposition. Soviet Russia will be represented, also the Vatican City, Italy, Great Britain, Nazi Germany, Norway, Brazil, federated Austria and Imperial Japan.

Thomas J. Watson and Frederick Sterling have been named commissioners general of the American section by President Roosevelt, while Pierre C. Cartier, of New York, heads the American committee.

The buildings will occupy a site of some 150 acres near the Trocadero Palace and along both banks of the Seine, where the exposition has a mile-long frontage.

May 1 will be a nation-wide holiday, and in the streets of Paris, a pageant will be staged, entitled "France at Work."
