

WHYS AND OTHERWISE

AS SEEN BY H. L. G.

Danny McFayden, the bespectacled hurler of the Boston Bees, because he manufactured a hook ball for himself last year was one of the outstanding mound aces last year, ranking next to Carl Hubbell. McKechnie is expecting that Danny will be one of the best pitchers in the league when the new season rolls around.

The Fredericton Capitals have been taking it on the chin right along, having so far captured only one game in the Southern N. B. Hockey loop. The railbirds are eagerly waiting to see if Bill Gill can make a change in the locals, and put them in the win column.

The National Hockey League is showing its color these recent nights. Cecil Hart took a crack at the referees the other night at Montreal, and told the hockey writers that "unless you denounce the referees you are not good hockey writers." So the battle is on again.

Damon Runyon, one of the foremost sports writers in the country, tells how some of the sports writers keep on going, when they leave the prolific field of sports writing. Runyon tells of the fate of some of these writers:

About sports writers, now—Harley Marquis Walker: Once called "Beanie." His book, "Come Out Fighting," which ran serially in the Los Angeles Examiner, is being readied for publication.

Walker, a pupil of the great Charley van Loan, was for years sports editor of the Examiner, then became a title writer for the silent movies, and wound up as an associate of Hal Roach, with plenty of dough.

"Beanie" was always a terrific ringworm, and was regarded as one of the foremost authorities on boxing in this country. He wrote out of his personal knowledge of the game, and he knows plenty about it. But imagine a guy writing when he doesn't have to!

Bill Corum: Sports columnist of the New York Journal, author of a regular series of movie sport shorts, and now rapidly becoming famous and widely popular as a radio sports commentator.

Has a soft, soothing voice that he had with him when he came out of old Missouri. A handsome, suave, pudgy gent, who loves football, and horse races better than any other sports, a grand fellow personally, and an all-around man.

Francis Wallace: A big, serious looking chap out of Notre Dame, who was a sports writer on the Daily News and the World Telegram, and who has become, in two years, one of the foremost fiction writers of the country.

His novel, "Kid Galahad," which ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post, is being made into a super-special by Warner Brothers, with Edward G. Robinson as the star. Wallace recently returned from the Paramount lot in Hollywood where he worked on one of his own stories, "The Big Game."

Is a prodigious worker, but always has time to suffer the inclemencies of the weather in the football press boxes with his old associates.

John Kieran: Sports columnist of the New York Times, whose book, "The Story of the Olympic Games," is on the stands at this very writing.

The sports writers of the world will bless the name of Kieran for a mighty valuable reference book and the reading public for an entertaining presentation of a topic that most writers would have left mighty dry.

Paul Gallico: A large, solemn looking citizen from Columbia University, where he used to yank an oar in a racing shell, and who retired after ten years of writing a sports column for the Daily News, to write fiction.

His short stories have been a sensational success. He recently completed a book, "Farewell to Sport," that is said to be hotter than a forty-five. Paul went to England to live, and write, about a year ago, but bobbed up covering the Olympic games in Berlin for his old papers. Those sports writers always come back for more.

Goal—How Scored
16. A goal shall be scored when the puck shall have been put between the goal posts by the stick of a player of the attacking side, from in front and below the line of the goal on the top, and entirely across a red line the width of the diameter of the goal posts, drawn on the ice from one goal post to the other.

MONTREAL HAS NEW PUNCHER IN MAX BERGER

New Lightweight Sensation Being Prepped For Ring Wars

MONTREAL, Jan. 11—Maxie Berger, outstanding Montreal, lightweight boxer, who has been steadily climbing the issue ladder in his division, launches into his 1937 campaign at Bronx Coliseum, New York City, Jan. 12. He meets Irish Eddie Brinks, strong Manhattan fighter in an eight round bout. Brinks is one of the top-notchers in the class in the metropolitan area. He has appeared in several main bouts at Madison Square Garden, at the Hippodrome and at the Coliseum. He got the decision over Saverio Turriello, latest Italian importation in a twelve-round in Havana, Cuba, in 1935, lost a close ten-round to Jimmy Leto, outstanding welterweight. More recently he defeated Pete Mascia, lost a close one to Pedro Montanez. Aldo Spoldi got the duke over him at the Garden. The latter verdict was much criticized by the fans. Berger in his last appearance at the Coliseum scored a sensational victory when he stopped Lou Massey in four rounds. He has been fighting and defeating lightweights of quality and is rapidly becoming a strong favorite with the fans of the Bronx district.

So rapidly is Maxie Berger gaining reputation that his manager Lou Wyman has been approached by local sportsmen with a tentative plan calling for him to stage three fights in Montreal beginning a new fight season here early in February. Kid Chocolate, former featherweight champion of the world, now making a comeback, Dave Castilloux the rugged Lewiston, Me., puncher, and Orval Drouillard, of Windsor, who has a decision over Berger have been suggested as Maxie's opponents. But Wyman would rather have Berger stay in New York and gain more experience. He wants him to be a busy fighter, get lots of work and then plans to bring him back to Montreal for an active campaign to start at the end of the hockey season.

The nomination list for the race over the trying 4-1/2 miles course at Aintree on March 19 is six larger than last year.

Perry Rips Through Vines; Gill With Caps

PERRY BEAT VINES FOR THIRD STRAIGHT WIN

Rips Through Tall Californian by 6-0, 6-2, and 6-3.

CHICAGO, Jan. 10—Broad-shouldered Fred Perry, brilliant British star who relinquished the world amateur tennis throne to play the game for money, ripped through Ellsworth

Vines in straight sets last night, 6-0, 6-2, 6-3 for his third consecutive triumph of their tour, before 12,602 spectators in the Chicago stadium.

Vines, 31, with a cold, said before the match that he felt "much better" but to the spectators, who paid $21,242 to watch, the slat-like Californian did not look it except for rare flashes.

Slow as foot and apparently too weary to run much, he dropped the first set in five minutes.

Vines made his best effort of the evening in the final set. After Perry had romped through the first two games, Vines hauled himself together and won three games in a row to have the edge for the only time of the match.

Perry, after a wobbly start in the sixth game, again took charge and finished the match quickly. Perry and Lott defeated Vines and Barnes, 6-3, 6-2 in the doubles.

Enters Hospital
CHICAGO Jan. 10—Ellsworth Vines, 31, since opening a professional tennis tour with Fred Perry Wednesday night entered St. Luke's Hospital for a rest today and it appeared that at least one engagement of the tour will be cancelled.

Vines' physician said the professional was still running a fever and was suffering from mild influenza, tonsillitis, and a toxic condition.

Norval Dennisson of St. Stephen, is spending a few days with relatives in Marysville.

GILL PUTS CAPS THROUGH PACES

Stiff rugged practices featured the week-end workouts of the Fredericton Capitals under big Bill Gill, who assumed command of the team on Saturday as coach.

Blackboard lectures followed the practices which have been watched by a large gallery of fans highly satisfied with the progress made by the new coach.

Tuesday night the Capitals entertain St. Croix team here again, and on Wednesday Gill will take the team to Moncton to meet the Southern League leaders, the Maroons. It completes the Capital schedule for the week.
