Our Protestant Orphans

The report of the New Brunswick Protestant Home is being sent out by the Secretary, H. Usher Miller. The report shows that during the past year 204 children have been residents in the Home and that the Home has at all times been able to promptly care for every normal, healthy destitute child between the ages of two weeks and 14 years. A large number of these children have not a relative or guardian or any other sort that pays anything towards their individual maintenance. In other cases relatives pay into the Home amounts varying from one dollar a month per child upwards, so that it will be seen that there is much to be provided for in the way of financing.

Children came to the Home from all over the province. During the past year 12 children were received from York County and five from Sunbury. The denominations represented included Baptists, Anglicans, United Church and Presbyterians. Of these the largest number, 112, were of the Baptist denomination. In many cases the children received were those who were not wanted elsewhere or those who have been deserted by their fathers and mothers. In some sad cases the mother had died and the father had deserted the child.

This Home has helped hundreds of different little ones on the road to good citizenship during the years. It must be borne in mind that a large number of these children at the Home are babies and can do absolutely nothing for themselves and that the outlay for their maintenance must necessarily be considerable. The Daily Mail which has always endeavored to bring the needs of this worthy institution to the attention of the public is delighted to appeal to all charitable citizens, especially those of the different Protestant denominations, for their help in promoting this worthy cause.

Lloyd's Rejects Love

Lloyds of London will insure a wedding, compute the probabilities of the occurrence of war or twins where this type of protection is desired, but that ancient society of syndicates refuses to insure "undying love."

Despite its popularity and its intense reality, love which promotes marriage ties gives no continuing assurance of undying quality; at least not sufficient to warrant a business investment. "The greatest thing in the world," even that which "makes the world go round," never emerges from the nebulous long enough to permit insurance actuaries to compute risks. "Lloyd's will insure anything," except marriage and "undying love."

Marital love is one of those intangibles, dynamic when in operation, but likely to blow over like a wisp of fleecy cloud in a summer sky, its origin and its destiny as uncertain as its stay. All too often it is as changing as the emotions and caprices of a school girl. It is easy to understand that Lloyd's couldn't see its way clear to give it play, and with startling precision, too, the imminence or remoteness of disaster. (Perhaps it is because the latter is fate's doing, whereas love is all too often man's own undoing.)

All Wool and a Yard Wide

In the wool producing countries of the world growers long felt that their work was done when they had raised the wool and sent it to market. In recent years they have learned that further activity on their part is necessary if competition by manufacturers of alternative fibres is to be met. In 1934 the New Zealand government introduced a bill to impose a levy of not more than fourpence a bale on all wool produced in the country, the fund so established to be used to improve the quality of the Dominion's wool, to study sheep raising problems and to advertise the virtues of wool. The fund will be administered by a research committee appointed by the Council of Scientific and Industrial Research.

Australia and South Africa fell into line with New Zealand at a recent conference in Melbourne, at which the wool growers of the three Dominions were represented; details of an international plan were worked out to increase consumption of wool by a worldwide campaign, but enlisting the aid of scientists to find new uses for wool and by discovering means to combat substitutes. Discussions lasted for a week, ending in a decision by the delegates to meet science with science instead of relying upon purely defensive tactics. They demanded that governments enact uniform laws to prevent fraudulent use of such terms as "woolen" and "all wool" in trade descriptions and requiring the marking of fabrics containing certain blends of fibres and substitutes. It was declared that even in Australia cases had come to light of the sale as "all wool" of articles containing only a small percentage of wool. The hope was expressed that Argentina would co-operate when the movement was launched, and that eventually a conference of growers from all wool growing countries would be held.

In April of last year woolen manufacturers in Bradford, England, undertook to provide $250,000 annually for five years toward a campaign having increased consumption of wool for its object. By means of levies, Australia will contribute about $300,000 to the campaign fund this year; South Africa $200,000, and New Zealand, $85,000. Up to the close of 1935 Australian wool growers insisted that the inherent good qualities of natural wool were so obvious and so generally appreciated that no rival fibres could offer serious or continued competition. The subsequent increase in sales of articles manufactured from such fibres, added to restrictions upon international trade and reiteration by many nations of their intention to become self-contained, have brought about a less confident attitude.

"Explosive Mixtures"

From London comes an article written by Sir Herbert in which he puts a finger on one phase of current world unrest. He writes:

"A mixture of misery and education is highly explosive. If people are ignorant as well as wretched, they are likely to be apathetic; or if they become turbulent, they will certainly be ineffective.

"But," Sir Herbert goes on, "a proletariat that suffers and has some measure of education, which believes it knows of some possible way of escape, may be formidable. . . . In many countries the forces of discontent have become communist, revolutionary, intolerant, anti-religious, anti-democratic, internationalist."

The force of Sir Herbert's words depends on what he considers education. A purely materialistic education is a breeder of greed and intolerance. Another point that Sir Herbert failed to mention is that by education the "haves" expressed a hope that the "have-nots" could be civilized. Yet when the "have-nots" showed a disposition to surround themselves with some of the material comforts of civilization, too many of the "haves" cried out:

"Oh, we don't mean THAT civilized."

Maybe they didn't want to civilize them, after all. Maybe they just wanted to "tame them."

On the other side we have the intellectually and physically slothful who rant and rave about their rights and have absolutely nothing to say about their duties. These two extremes battle the world over, to the hurt of the truly civilized.

SNAPSHOTS

If the man who wrote us the 'sassy' letter today does not like our gate he does not have to swing on it. We are absolutely right. So far as threats go they are clear "bull." We have butted up against fellows like that before. We are having the letter framed.

This letter is in direct contrast to another which we received this morning commending us on our home community spirit. Modesty prevents publishing the complimentary letter. But we appreciate it just the same.

The jail menu still continues to be the worst in the province. The County Council has already made changes which were suggested by The Daily Mail, after it had carded out this paper. There are no longer any bed bugs, but the menu is still a disgrace.

No person has ever found out the history of the forty five cents per day per man allowed by the Liquor Control Board. How much went to the jailor? The County Council should clear this up. Not that we say there is anything wrong, but if there is not what is there to be ashamed of in letting the public know. There is enough money coming in to give the prisoners better board than they are receiving.

When is the road and streets committee going to remove the disgraceful condition of Aberdeen Street in the middle of which the city stone yard still operates? There was a resolution passed some weeks ago to remove this condition. Action, not resolution is what is needed.

King and Queen

Only rehearsal point today. Virtually everyone was mindful of Wednesday making preparations either for their own comfort and safety or for those to whom they will cater in one of a million ways. Even now stands along the route are filled with sightseers munching sandwiches and taking a brief rest from the sidewalk surge.

Anyone suggesting that Coronation interest has lagged in indulging in a bit of foolish imagination. Possibly not, but the 100-guinea seats have been sold, but that is a tribute to the intelligence of the people rather than a sign of disloyalty. For every expensive seat filled, police who have been watching the crowds during the past week anticipate 1,000 more crushing pedestrians in the side streets than was earlier expected.

As for the weather, the indifference of the mobs to yesterday's falling rain settles that angle, for it was clothes and not enthusiasm that were dampened. The stands are now fully prepared and gay in colored cloth and are not the eyesores of unclad timber as earlier. And the great parks are radiant with fresh flowers.

Beacons Will

Where possible, the beacons are being lighted at historic points. At Saint John the fires will burn at old Fort Howe, Martello Hill and Anthony's Cove. The first Gaspeian Scout troop will light their fire on the tip of Gaspe and the answering flare of Quebec Scouts will burn at Cape Diamond.

Montreal Scouts gathered on Mt. Royal will pass the signal on up the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes and up the Ottawa Valley to the capital. At Ottawa one of the biggest beacons of the chain 60 feet in height is ready to flame on the highest point overlooking the city.

North Bay, Port William and Port Arthur and intervening points will carry the chain to Winnipeg, to Portage La Prairie and on across the Canadian West to the coast.

Peter Van Steeden is the first radio maestro this season to be invited to make a personal appearance at Steel Pier, Atlantic City.

Morton Bowe has an offer of another commercial, which if he accepts will raise his batting average to five weekly.

ESTEEMED WOMAN PASSED AWAY AT HOME YESTERDAY

Death of Mrs. Beatrice B. Simmonds Deeply Mourned Here

One of Fredericton's most highly esteemed and respected citizens, Mrs. Beatrice B. Simmonds, wife of Bruce L. Simmonds, passed away yesterday afternoon at the family residence, 314 Regent Street. Although she had been ill for several weeks and death was not unexpected, nevertheless it came as a shock to her family and friends. She was well known in Fredericton where she resided for the past 18 years, enjoying the friendship of a wide circle of friends.

Born at Loggieville fifty-four years ago, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Kelly, the deceased spent the early part of her life in the Miramichi district. During her residence in this city, she was actively interested in the affairs of the community and was a staunch supporter of every project for the religious or social advancement of the city in which she lived.

Possessing a charming personality, the life of the deceased exemplified the noble principles of true Christianity womanhood. She was respected by all who knew her, and in her passing the community suffers a distinct loss.

Surviving are her husband, and two daughters Misses Arline and Bernice. Two brothers and one sister are also left to mourn. They are William and David Kelly, Loggieville, and Mrs. W. B. Johnson of this city. The funeral will take place Thursday morning with High Mass of Requiem in St. Dunstan's church at 9 a. m.

Bookish Puns

Alone and Like It" was the sequel to "The Web of Loneliness." In a tone of subtle satire, Mr. Duff, out of the observations of a reader, proceeded to tell the authors how and what to write. They should all have unhappy childhoods, he said, and be victims of frustration to be successful. "No matter how crazy you are, you can always find an editor or publisher crazier," quoting from the London Mercury to prove it.

B. K. Sandwell followed with a clever burlesque speech in the interests of the Home Improvement Plan. As "a humble member of the building trade," he advised authors to get behind this movement because home was the only place where a book is read, and the better the home the more likely books will be read.

Mr. Justice Chevrier, of the Ontario Supreme Court and formerly counsel for the association at Ottawa was with Madame Chevrier, a successful playwright, a guest of honor, who added words of sound advice.

Other speakers included Sir Charles G. D. Roberts, Mrs. E. MacDonald (L. M. Montgomery), Dr. E. J. Pratt, Miss Elsie Pomeroy, H. A. Kennedy, Professor Pelham Edgar and Lewis Duncan.

TOWN of DEVON

The Town of Devon joins with every City and Town in the British Empire in wishing His Gracious Majesty King George VI. most hearty felicitations on this the occasion as King and Emperor of this great Realm.

And the citizens of the Town of Devon pray that Almighty God may grant our Sovereign, Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth and all the members of the Royal Family continued health and happiness and it is their earnest desire that he may continue to rule us long.

SCHOOL CHILDREN PRESENT SPECIAL PROGRAMS TODAY

Patriotic Songs, Talks by Speakers Are Features

The school children of Fredericton presented interesting programs in their respective schools this afternoon in commemoration of the Coronation of His Majesty King George VI, which takes place in Westminster Abbey tomorrow. Patriotic songs recitations and other interesting high lights featured the programs which were carried out in the various assembly halls.

During the afternoon, the pupils were made recipients of coronation medals and listened to appropriate addresses given by several prominent speakers. The school population has entered wholeheartedly into the spirit of the celebration and tomorrow will take a prominent part in the day's program.

Each city school, as well as the Marysville school, will have floats in the monster procession which is to be held in connection with the celebration. Prizes have been offered to the schools having the most original or colorful float and a keen sense of rivalry has risen between the different schools. The floats will be of a historical nature, depicting scenes of events of historic significance. The principals and teachers have co-operated with the pupils in every way and no effort has been spared to insure the success of the pupils' part in the celebration.

Is Helium

conceivably be trusted to use in commercial aviation any helium gas supplied it for use in commercial aviation. But could Germany?

It has not been and is not German practice to adhere to any international undertaking, public or private, political, monetary or commercial that could cramp the style of Germany's masters. It has been and is German practice to employ what ever trick or subterfuge might be likely to ensure the German Reich an advantage against the day when advantages are useful to war-makers. European history from 1866 to 1937 is the evidence of it.

German wars are prepared in advance and thus far in history Germany has never hesitated to mis-use peaceful commercial relations to help along the preparations.

The only way yet found to keep Germany's rulers from collecting in peace what they think they may need to make a successful war is not to let them have what they think they may need.

Obviously that is a mean, suspicious way to look at it. In the case of the United States refusal to supply helium for German commercial dirigibles, the result of looking at it that way has been suffering and tragedy for American and German alike. But these are days when the penalty of generosity and trust promises, internationally at least, to be even more painful than the penalties of meanness and suspicion.

"There appears to be some correlation between the intelligence quotient of mothers and of their children who have been reared in foster homes, but the relationship is so slight that knowledge of a mother's intelligence quotient is of very little value in predicting the intelligence quotient of her child."
