

CANADIANA

THE CARMAN HOMESTEAD

The old house stands within the garden closes,
The lilacs cluster round its sheltered door;
Tall elm trees shade the many high-eaved gables
And great brick chimneys rising as before.

When he who dwelt beneath its well-loved roof-tree
Moved down the walk with pensive lingering pace
With tawny head uplifted in the sunlight
And sweet, slow smile upon the quiet face.

The spring wind rustles through the bending branches
The lilacs' perfume scents the spring-time air,
The songbirds build and sing songs not more sweetly
Than he who loved them once and found them fair.

And when the summer days come fraught with dreaming
And evening winds blow sweet within its closes,
Perhaps the spirit comes in scented twilight
And lingers there a while among the roses.

And when the glory-tinted autumn pageant
Moves o'er the painted hills in colors bold
Behind the old-time garden of his boyhood,
Perhaps he knows them as he did of old.

Spring Fashion Notes

The Sky wore a dress of delectable blue
With puffs of white cloud; and the Day had on
A glimmering, shimmering frock faced with dew.
The Willow Tree came in a pale-green chiffon.
The Hills wore brown velvet with veils of chartreuse;
The Cliffs were distinguished in dignified gray;
The Sea's ruffled robe showed a mixture of hues.
The Willow Tree wore her green gown every day

Of the season. No matter how many Or varied the costumes her gay friends might don
At Springtime's receptions, there never was any
One fair as the Willow in soft green chiffon.

COMPUTES
EXPENSE OF VISION SETS

The question of how much more power will be consumed by the television-sound receiver than by the sound receiver alone is one upon which little or no information has been available outside of research laboratories. This question is an important one to both the prospective owner of a television receiving set and to the electrical industry itself.

The German television firm of Fernseh A. G., has given some figures that may serve to throw some light upon this question.

"The required power supply for sound alone," says the report, "is approximately 200 volt amperes, while the reception of sound and vision requires 300 volt amperes."

The French receiver is so constructed that it may be used to receive sound alone, on the ultra-short waves, or both sound and vision. From these figures it is apparent that half again as much power might be expected to be consumed by sound and vision, as by sound alone.
