Fredericton Guide

had met. The following day we left Epson for our camp at Chigwell Row Essex. While there we were entertained by different dignitaries and visited Waltham Abbey where King Harold is buried. The next day Her Royal Highness Princess Mary, and Lady Baden Powell visited us. The Guides formed a Guide of honor and the Princess took a salute, following she shook hands with all the Guides. It is of local interest to my own company in Fredericton to note that the fountain pen which was given to me as a parting gift before my departure from Fredericton was used by Her Royal Highness Princess Mary in signing the Camp Log Book and the Canadian's Guide Log Book. Lady Baden Powell walked around the camp which consisted of several hundred acres and spoke to the girls informally as she met them. The weather was very bad but Lady 'BP' proved herself a real Guide as she donned rubber boots and macintosh and sluiced through the mud.

On Sunday we attended the Chigwell church and took part in the "Guides Own" ceremony. There were present, Guides from every corner of the British Empire. This was very impressive and all the Guides were deeply moved. The Bishop's text was the "Guides Promise" and his words will ever be remembered by us. That afternoon we visited St. Augustine's Abbey and Hatfield Castle where we had tea in the old banqueting hall.

The next day was the climax of the trip—the Coronation—we spent the previous night in town where we were billeted in a gymnasium. An interesting fact was that all colors and creeds and nations mingled with the spirit of democarcy. We rose at 4.30 and went to our stand at Constitution Hill. We had a very enviable position with a clear view of Buckingham Palace. The Canadian Guides cheered very lustily at the 'Mounties' who proved to be the greatest attraction for many colonies The stage coach approached amid rousing cheers but when it actually arrived in front of our stand the crowd was so silent that one could hear a pin drop. Their Majesties appeared to be very tired but very regal in bearing. Queen Mary and the little Princesses were very much acclaimed by the crowds. Princess Elizabeth waving her hand as she had been taught to do very gracefully and little Margaret Rose who was continually attracting the attention of the Queen Mother to look in directions which she pointed out. The little Princesses showed a childish interest in everything that went on and were greatly exclaimed for their remarkable beauty. That night the Guides joined the throng outside of Buckingham Palace to see the Royal Family on the balcony. We had a very good position and were able to see every member of the Royal Family very clearly. The flood lighting was a sight which we had never before witnessed and one never to be forgotten. The next day we went to the Derbyshire County Camp. This was a comparatively small camp compared to the gathering at Chigwell Camp. We enjoyed tea with the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire and found them very charming. The next day I left the other Guides and went to Edinburgh as the guest of Mrs. Malcolm McPherson who was formerly the Captain of the 3rd Fredericton Company. After a week's stay here I left for Rippon, England, to visit my father's cousin, Frederick Hargreave. While there I attended an ordination service at Rippon Cathedral and visited Hargate the famous health resort and baths. Of personal interest to me was a visit to the home of my grandmother, Mrs. James R. Howie, at Ripley.

I now returned to the Imperial Headquarters and met my former companions. The following day we visited Foxleigh, the famous Guide House which Princess Mary endowed several years ago. Twelve countries were there represented, and among distinguished visitors were Lady Baden Powell the Chief Guide, the Crown Princess Sybilla, President of Guiding and Crown Prince Gustoph Adolf of Sweden all of whom shook hands with the overseas Guides. We remained at Foxleigh for a few days and did some training work. We returned to London and visited friends and also the derby races where we had complimentary seats next to the Royal box. While in London we took part in the largest Guide rally ever known. A few days after was the Epson Guide Rally. The honor fell upon me to be one of the three only overseas Guides present.

Then followed a sightseeing tour of London. Among places of interest that we visited were the Tower of London, Madam Tussaud's, St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey and London Bridge. On this day we saw the Trooping of the Colors at St. James Palace. That afternoon we had tea at Dame Alice Godwin's who is the president of the London Guides. Here we had the honor of shaking hands with Princess Alice of Athlone, a sister of the late King George V. Thus ended our stay in London. On the Saturday following we sailed on the R.M.S. Ausonia reaching Montreal on Sunday the 20th of June. Sunday night Janice Harrison and I left the other Guides and started for home."

It might be of interest to Fredericton Guides to know that the picture of their representative appeared twice in the London Graphic on one occasion Miss Howie appears in company with an African Guide and again with a group at camp. Miss Howie is delighted to be home again and the trip home was made in record time.

Miss Howie who is a popular member of the younger set in Fredericton and an outstanding Guide was guest of honor at many social functions prior to her departure for England.

"Love Thy Neighbor As Thyself"

Human beings are all the same. They are all susceptible to mental and physical torment and, on the other hand, they all respond to courtesy and consideration.

Whether you are walking or driving in traffic watch what the other fellow is doing. Do not attempt to out-guess him. It is safer to give him the benefit of the doubt.

In that way many accidents will be avoided and we will not be haunted by recollections of past omissions or carelessness on the highways.

The Song-Bird's Secret

K—THE SONG- ... ...
There's a note in the blackbird's singing
As he hides in the hedge of yew;
There is joy in the thrush's carol,
Of a song from out of the blue.

In the skylark's soulful anthem
There's a longing wild and sweet;
It seems to come from heaven,
Where the joy of life's complete.

The nightingale proclaims it,
As she pipes in yonder grove,
And my heart asks yours a question,
And the answer wakes—'tis love.

Hepburn-King

From the community of interests which the two premiers have between them, federal circles are able to deduce the broad character of any movement which they might sponsor. Mr. Duplessis is engaged in a war on Communism, while Mr. Hepburn is waging a crusade against the C. I. O. which he regards as essentially Communistic in its nature.

Consequently, any movement which the two powerful premiers would form would necessarily be a Rightist movement, appealing to industrial support and appealing, also, to the rural populations of both provinces on the ground of preventing the production of the goods which the farmers must buy from getting into racketeering hands, with the inevitable consequence of increased prices.

Balance of Power

The object of the movement would not be power for itself, but balance of power and dictation of its policies to whatever party formed the nominal government.

What is the interest of the Conservative party in this topsy-turvy Liberal situation? Does it stand to benefit? As yet political observers cannot tell. The Tories are still jockeying for position. The truth is that, so far, Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King has been occupying the middle road which Conservatives would like to occupy. The belief is, however, that events will transpire in Mr. King's own party before another session is over which will force him to move farther to the left. The low-tariff wing of his party is on the warpath on the prairies. Consequently, the Conservatives are hopeful that before long the middle position of compromise between low tariffs and radical monetary policies, and right-wing movement will be theirs. If the Liberal party is divided into both right-wng and left-wing opposition, conceivably it will meet the Tories' idea of a situation promising to their fortunes.

And what of the C. C. F.? Since the last election they have been looked upon as nothing more than a spent force. At one time, they looked like a threat in the general situation. That was during the depression, when they appeared to be in the best position of any of the parties to capitalize the prevailing economic discontent. But they failed to take advantage of the psychological moment that was made for them, and destiny appears now to have passed them by.

The Social Credit group, without any individual exception, has failed entirely to register an impression, despite the wholesale manner in which it has littered the pages of Hansard. It is looked upon as the most obvious political accident to which electoral discontent in Canada has ever given rise.

No, the third-party threat of the moment is not among the old third parties. It lies in a new source—the prospect of a Hepburn-Duplessis alliance. And there will be little restful sleep for either of the old parties on Parliament Hill until that long-forecast Ontario provincial general election is over.

Six Known Dead

morning as police fired on a mob of striking United British Oil Company employes, as the strikers closed in to attack them at the Point Fortin oil field.

Wives of European employes of the oil companies were reported to be fleeing toward Port of Spain. Employes of the Apex oil field also struck early today, stopping all work on the pitch lake.

Today's deaths bring the total toll exacted since the strikes began Saturday to six. William Bradburn, 26 year old police official, and a Port of Spain police corporal were victims of the strikers' clubs and hatchets.

No More Chain Store Competition . . .

No More Orders going to Mail Order Houses

Right at your own door now workmen and farmers have the opportunity of buying at even lower prices than these concerns can offer. For years in this town and county the big fellows have had it pretty much their own way, put it all over the smaller stores whose managers thought they couldn't compete with them. Now here's a store, the new Workmen's Store at 76 York Street, that is selling its goods at prices that make the chain store prices seem high. This store gives you a superior selling and trading service, has a greater interest in your transactions, exchanges goods, refunds money, and adjusts any unsatisfactory matter. It provides a larger assortment of goods and a better assortment. Every individual customer is considered as a valuable one. Goods are purchased to sell here by buyers who know your needs. No job lots; no goods not up to a standard. Every man and woman who buys here must be a satisfied customer. The opinions of hundreds of customers now patronizing this new Workmen's Store are that it is filling a long-felt want in the city, giving our working people the chance to supply their needs under modern trading conditions. This is the home of all kinds of working wear for men. A place where every worker can buy and feel easy, regardless of his dress, or how rough his clothes may appear. The man in the overalls or the pick and shovel man is the man we want to meet. That's the man we're depending on to keep this store going. The farmer who cannot be always dressed up when he comes to town will be welcome here. No matter how you think you look you are our prospect, the man we want to do business with at this

NEWS IS A FUNNY THING

News is a funny thing
Some stories have a string
And some have not
Most stories you can use
But some—are best forgot.

One day you are assigned
Work like a master mind
Give all you've got
Slave all day to find
The tips too hot.

Next day your heart sings
You're in the midst of things
There's been a killing
You rush to the place
There's no blood spilling.

You search for crimes gory
To build a front page story
The docket's clean
No one ever kills their wife
With butcher knife or gasoline.

You can't get a raise
Never hear a word of praise
Seldom get a thrill
Hammer at the old machine
Like a horse in a treadmill.

You put on your hat or coat
You're going to take a boat
Hong Kong or Singapore
Can't stand the grind
Your last trip through the door.

Just then the phone rings
You're in the midst of things
"Boy, what a story!"
"This will knock them for a loop!"
"Boy, oh boy, what a scoop!"
