Luise Rainer Finds Hollywood Is Not Like Vienna

Possibly, Luise Rainer is not the moody, aloof star she has been pictured. Possibly it's Hollywood that disagrees with her. Friends have been amazed at the overnight change in the temperamental Viennese actress, who won filmdom's highest acting award in her second appearance in this country. She is positively exuberant.

Miss Rainer, starring with William Powell in 'The Emperor's Candlesticks' at the Boyd, admits she will be glad to get away from Hollywood for a vacation in Europe the minute filming of her next picture, 'The Big City,' is finished. 'It is no bed of roses here,' she said. 'I cannot be myself. I do what other people tell me to do. I have a contract and that contract tells me what I must do. But it is not good. I do not like it. I would like to be free to do the kind of pictures I think best suited to me.'

Even to a town accustomed to sudden success, Miss Rainer's quick fame is considered a miracle. She was an unknown two years ago when Myrna Loy decided she did not wish to appear in 'Escapade.' Miss Rainer with no knowledge of English, mastered the language in two months and was put in the part.

She was an instantaneous hit. Since then the Viennese has completed three other roles 'The Great Ziegfeld' which won her the Academy award, 'The Good Earth' and 'The Emperor's Candlesticks.' If she could break her contract tomorrow to do a stage play, she wouldn't hesitate. Her husband, Clifford Odets, has just completed another for Broadway and Luise would give almost anything to play the star role in it.

Disliking parties and all public appearances, the M.G.M. star usually escapes with, 'I do not like zoos zings.' Recently at a formal party she was so bored she left a dinner

HOW TO KEEP YOUR HEALTH

SUCTION SPEEDS CIRCULATION

(By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, Former President American Public Health Association)

When you drink liquid through a straw, you pull the air out of the straw and the liquid rises into the mouth. Today, I want to tell you how this principle of suction is used in helping sluggish circulation.

We have known for some time that many disorders of the body are due to the poor circulation of the blood. This poor circulation is probably the reason that older persons with varicose veins, that is, veins which are dilated or stretched, often develop chronic sores, called ulcers of the legs. Individuals who have had circulation in the legs often have muscle pains, particularly after walking.

During exercise, there is need for a greater supply of oxygen to the muscles. The blood carries the oxygen. Then, too, waste products are formed during exercise. The blood carries away these wastes from the tissues. In poor circulation, there is not enough oxygen and also wastes are not carried away fast enough. These materials accumulate and cause muscle pains. Thus for some years now doctors have been looking for a way to speed circulation.

A year or two ago, Dr. Louis G. Herrman, of the Cincinnati General Hospital, tried out a machine which worked on the 'suction' idea. The patient's leg was put in a tank and then all of the air was pumped out of the tank. Then the air was pumped back into the tank. First, lessening and then raising the air pressure in the leg is thought to stimulate the flow of the blood through the arteries and veins in the leg.

Dr. H. M. Korn, professor of Medicine, and Dr. A. E. Feller, assistant professor of medicine, at the State University of Iowa, have used a device of this sort in treating patients who had disorders of this nature. In a few cases there seemed to be permanent improvement.

When the circulation of the blood is not what it should be, the leg becomes bluish in color. This is called cyanosis. Persons with cyanosis, treated with the 'suction' tank method seemed to improve. Often, too, in this trouble, the kind of pains which came after exercise, were relieved to some extent by the use of this machine. Complete relief from the condition, however, was obtained in only a few cases.

In this treatment, small chronic ulcers became less painful, but they seemed to heal slowly. In the patients who showed the best results from the 'tank' treatment, the amount of sweating increases, the skin becomes pink, the temperature of the skin rose, while the pain and tenderness of the skin cleared up.

In diseases of poor circulation, larger blood vessels are often blocked. But, other smaller ones may gradually increase in size until they are able to properly take care of the circulation of the blood.

table in the middle of the meal and did not return or apologize.

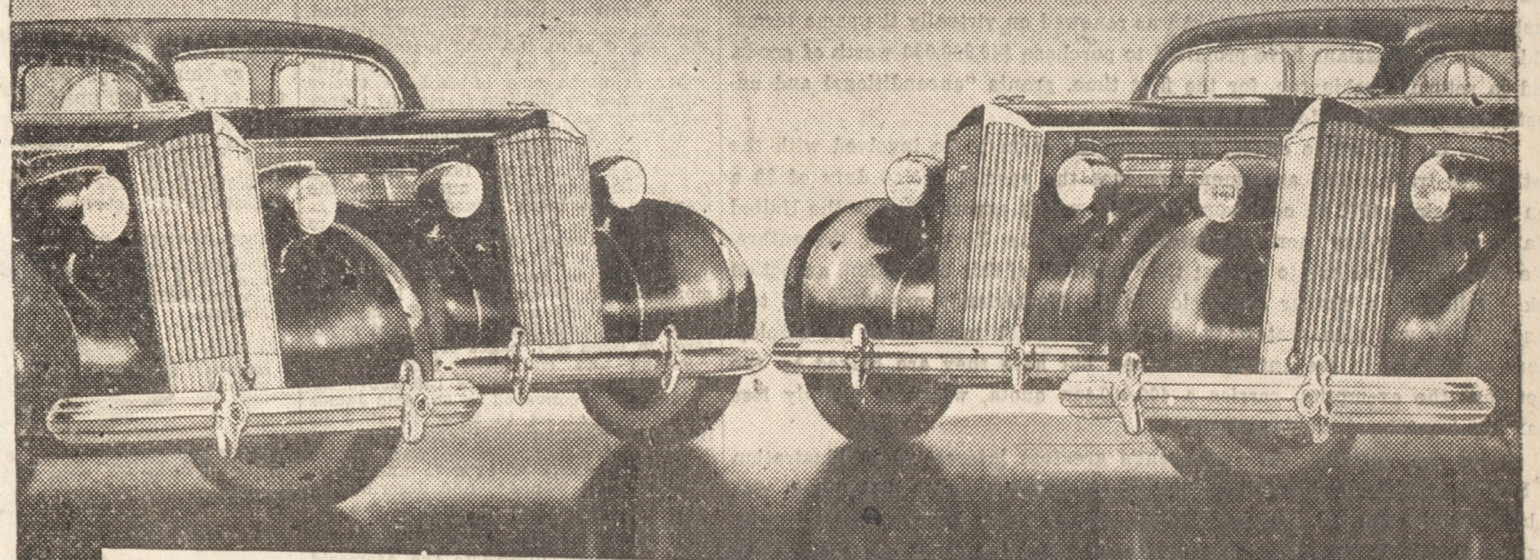

Yet for the party honoring May Robson, the odd little actress was so eager to attend she did not think to ask whether it was formal. She came in slacks and an old sweater, her favorite garb. The fact that everyone else wore evening clothes did not embarrass her, but she was upset because others had brought flowers and she had not. She soon fixed that up, though, sneaked out and picked a bouquet from the lawns of executives.

Perhaps Miss Rainer's most peculiar characteristics are concerned with food. She is a nibbler except when excited or fatigued. Then she eats plenty. Once at a dinner party she electrified the guests, to say nothing of what she did to the hostess, by going out to the kitchen and scrambling herself some eggs. Pie is one of her favorite dishes—for breakfast.

Her naivete is best illustrated by her remark when told she has been awarded the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Statuette for the Anna Held role in 'The Great Ziegfeld.' 'I must be a good actress, then,' she said simply.—L. L.
