PRETTY WEDDING AT PLASTER ROCK, SCAMMELL-EVERETT

Rover Crew as guard of honor first time in province

Plaster Rock, St. George's Anglican church was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Sunday May 23rd, at 9.00 a.m., when Geneva Everett of Nictau was united in marriage to Reginald Bertram Scammell of Fredericton, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Canon W. J. Clark. The bride was given in marriage by her father, and was attired in a dress of Coronation blue crepe with white accessories, and she carried a bouquet of Talisman roses. She was attended by Miss Jean Colpitts of Sussex, who wore navy blue and rose with white accessories, and carried carnations. The groomsmen were attended by his brother Douglas Scammell. The wedding march was rendered by Miss Erva Ingraham of Plaster Rock. Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served in the beautifully decorated church auditorium by friends of the bride. Eight members of the Fredericton, St. Anne's Rover Crew, who motored to Plaster Rock early in the morning formed a guard of honour outside the church, and the bridal party marched through an arch formed by the Rovers with raised Thumb Sticks. This is the first time in the province a Rover Crew in full dress have acted as a guard of honour on such an occasion.

tic about it. It is too early yet to predict the line that will be taken by the constituent states at this conference. The probabilities are that there will be a frank discussion but no immediate decisions. It is likely that these will be relegated to another conference, especially convened for the purpose.

That conference will, when it meets, certainly effect considerable but probably no radical changes in the preferential tariffs agreed to at Ottawa.

The fact that the next British Prime Minister, Mr. Neville Chamberlain, was a most active agent in promoting and determining the Ottawa agreements guarantees that no British concessions of any consequence will be withdrawn, no matter how detrimental they may be to the agricultural or international trade of Britain.

Conflict of interests has already appeared over the question of quotas. New Zealand and Australia naturally are desirous of sending to this country a greater supply of foodstuffs. On the other hand, British farmers think that the Ottawa quotas are too liberal as they stand, and are showing unmistakable signs of disaffection with the Government on its treatment of agriculture at home.

On international questions the Dominions are likely to present their views on the foreign policy of the Empire, with a certain degree of critical independence. There is a great deal of doubt as to what we really are aiming at in our foreign policy. Our best friends are mystified by our meandering. The Dominions will ask for explanations. Their opinions, on the whole, will approximate towards those generally held in the United States.

No Europe-Western Pact

They are not disposed to enter into any European entanglements. They are loyal to the League of Nations, but I will be surprised if they indicate any readiness to append their signatures to any new European-Western pact.

They did not signify their adhesion to a similar guarantee of frontiers when Europe was much more tranquil than it is today.

They are not likely to commit themselves to a revised Locarno pact when the great powers of Europe are tion he represents to go to war to defend the Rhine against German or French invasion.

No Dominion Prime Minister could carry his own party into the lobby on a proposal for the ratification of such an undertaking.

"If British Towns Bombed"

On the other hand, if British towns were bombed by hostile enemy airplanes and British ships were attacked and sunk on the high seas, or if Signor Mussolini, with the facilities afforded to the Spanish ports and the aid given by him to the Spanish Fascists, sought to slam the doors of the Mediterranean against British ships or feverishly arming to the teeth for a conflict which might be imminent. Their influence and pressure will be exerted entirely in the direction of peace. But the ywill shrink from any commitments beyond those involved in the covenant of the league.

That does not mean that, if the Mother Country is involved in war the rest of the Empire would stand aloof, or, at best, play the part of a friendly neutral. It only implies that no Dominion minister dare confront his Parliament with the announcement that he has appended his signature to a document pledging the invaded British territory in Africa, the whole Empire would, without waiting for appeal, spring to arm and offer such resistance as would be needed by Britain to repel her foes.

India and Australia, just as much interested as Britain in the freedom of the Mediterranean, the Red Sea, and South Africa, would not regard with complacency Italian occupation of Kenya in East Africa by a black army under Italian leadership.

There was never a time in the history of this strange Empire when the spirit of independence from central interference was more assertive, and never a time when real unity of the Empire was more complete.

At this conference some effort will be made to bring the influence of the Empire to bear more directly on the problems of international peace.

Questions of co-ordination of imperial defence will be discussed. Some progress has been made towards rendering more effective the resources of the Empire in war. But the real preoccupation of the Dominions and India will be the promotion of world defence. It is a supreme chance for a strong and bold leadership.

Gen. Smuts' Advice Needed

It is regrettable that General Smuts should not be present. Apart from his outstanding abilities, his experience with the complexities of the problem from the days of the war and the making of peace down to this hour is not possessed by any other statesman at the conference. The Empire needs his guidance and his prestige as an international figure to give the unrivalled weight of his counsel.

If his enlightened views on the situation were adopted by the representatives of the Empire at this juncture it might give a new turn to world affairs. No lead of circumstance, however, can make up for deficiency of leadership at the centre.

Mr. Eden gives the impression of a man whose ideas are sound and whose aim is clear and lofty. But he is young. He has not yet achieved triumphs which give a minister unchallengeable authority in the councils of his party.

He may not have been permitted to take necessary measures to secure success. His political position, therefore, is not strong enough to enable him to overcome the prejudice of his more stubborn—not to say more stupid—colleagues unless he is assured of the whole-hearted active and continuous support of the head of the government.

"Empire Waits for Leadership"

No one knows where Mr. Baldwin stands on any of the vital issues upon the right determination of which world peace depends. Hitherto he has not stood at all—his general attitude of mind being recumbent, varied by rolling from one side to the other.

His words do not give indication of his attitude towards any line of action. He attaches more importance to the speech he delivers than to the policy he is supposed to proclaim.

Nothing could have been more satisfactory than the general tone of his speeches at the last election on the application of the doctrine of collective security to the invasion of Abyssinia. Nothing could have been more abject or baser than the action which followed his high sounding declarations.

His words are wise but his deeds are apt to be wobbly. He will not give decisive, effective guidance to the Imperial Conference on the course the Empire ought to follow in international affairs.

He never points the direction of advance with his sword—He just waves it towards the clouds. His speech to the conference was vague with a flourish of exalted sentiment. The Empire is waiting for specific, intelligible leadership.

"Lucidity and Directness"

Will it come from Neville Chamberlain? He is not addicted to slosh. He has the lucidity and directness of peace commission, with Allister Stewart of Winnipeg and Paul Alain of Montreal, chairmen of the internal peace commission.

Yesterday morning delegates split up into committee to discuss occupational problems in industry, agriculture, business and professions, and in colleges. In the evening the two committees held sessions to work out findings that will be presented to a general meeting of the Congress this morning for voting.

This afternoon delegates will attend a celebration in honor of Dollard Desormeaux in Lafontaine Park. The closing session of the Congress takes place this evening when the new continuation committee, being elected by ballot, will be presented to the delegates.

After the resolution had been put before the delegates speaker after speaker rose to endorse the stand of the French Canadians on behalf of various organizations.

Four cheers greeted the speech of Roy Davis, who announced the League for the French Canadian resolutions.
