I Shall Stop Dreaming

I shall stop dreaming of the far-off places
Where strange old cities cast a glamorous spell,
Where mysteries entice and time effaces
Their dim beginnings. I shall seek to quell
The lure that beckons toward some hidden treasure
Along barbaric coasts, to probe the wild
Impenetrable jungle; there is pleasure
In simple paths of life if reconciled.

Better than dreaming is the mind's unveiling
To humble beauty in a bent old man;
This little shop behind the basement piling
Holds romance in a broken ivory fan.
Enchanted is the bench where lovers meet,
And childhood glorifies the meanest street.
