A Reminder

I cannot hold the leaves in circling flight,
Nor keep the crimson in the smallest flower
But I can dream of that soft April night,
And see a promise in this sombre hour.
I cannot help the friendship won and lost
(Because I failed in some too subtle test),
But I can shape anew (nor reck the cost)
To stronger, finer codes, my soul's behest.
I cannot help if half a world in strife
Has struck my heart in passing—left it bare;
But I can bridge across to larger life
(Having a future hope), and find it there.
—Richard Scrase.

Science Club Met Last Evening

The regular meeting of the Fredericton Science Club was held last evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. Alvah Good, Regent Street. About thirty members were in attendance. The President announced the names of the nominating committee who will take under consideration the slate of officers to be elected at the next annual meeting to be held in February. The nominating committee was composed of Major F. A. Good, Fred B. Smith and Mrs. A. E. Mathewson. The speaker of the evening, R. P. Gorham, then introduced his subject, "The Story of the Bible," and quoted as his principal authority Sir Herbert Kenyon, director and Librarian of the British Museum, who was custodian of the majority of the manuscripts and fragments of writing through the Bible survived in the form now known.

Considering that printing was invented in 1452 and that the first complete Bible in English was printed in 1535 (Jacques Cartier in New Brunswick) the bulk of the credit for survival of this library of books making up the 'Book of Books' must certainly be given to the copyists who transcribed each individual character and word from an earlier writing. The early books of the Old Testament were written on clay tablets the earliest form of writing that has survived. Libraries of such tablets have been discovered and dated as early as 3,000 B.C.

The invention of papyrus sheets made this vastly more portable. These sheets, roughly the size of our type-writer paper, were glued together to form rolls about 30 feet long, each of which had room for one of the shorter books of the Bible. When a longer book required more than one roll the two rolls became two books, hence 1 and 2 Kings, etc.

As writing material vellum was soon made from calf skin and its use was superseded by paper, invented about 1100 A.D. This was very enduring and contributed largely to the preservation of the writings between copyings. The papyrus rolls were not durable, wore out rather readily and moisture in the air would cause the glue between sheets to soften or spoil so the vaults of libraries and the dry sands of tombs, e.g., in mummy cases and jars buried in them, are the greatest sources of survival of these ancient books.

The speaker told of the various groupings and translations of the bibles. The Vulgate, translated by St. Jerome nearly 400 A.D., printed in 1453. First English Bible, incomplete, by Tyndale, 1526. The first complete English Bible was that of Miles Coverdale, 1535. It was illegal to own a Bible in England at this time and the second edition in 1537 bore a frontispiece licensing it for general use. In 1557 the Protestant refugees from Queen Mary's persecution, published a Bible in English at Geneva. In this the Eden fig leaf apron was rendered as 'breeches'—hence the 'Breeches Bible,' a copy of which was shown by Major F. A. Good. In 1604 (the year Champlain entered New Brunswick history) a congress was assembled by King James, six committees entrusted with preparing a very accurate translation of the Bible. This work was completed in 1611 and the King James' Version was accepted till 1881 when the Revised Version was issued but never became popular.

A vote of thanks was moved by Major F. A. Good, seconded by Stanley Wood, carried unanimously and conveyed by the chairman, Mrs. J. Brown Maxwell. Refreshments provided by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. S. S. Miller, Mrs. F. A. Good and Mrs. Leslie Wood, concluded a delightful meeting.
