Paving Work Commences In F'ton, Devon

from Barker's Point to the Marysville line and through Water street and St. Mary's street to the Douglas county line. These new roads will supply a long-felt want in the township of Devon and will greatly alleviate the dust nuisance.

Further work in Fredericton is planned for later in the summer.

TO CONTINUE RELIEF

A. W. Barbour, deputy minister of public works has been requested by the provincial government to inform municipal officials that the government's contribution to direct relief will be continued this month in cases where a demand in this connection is made. This settles any question as to where direct relief would continue. The government's contribution will be in force in the province during June on the same basis as formerly, with the municipalities required to pay one-third of the cost. Because of increased employment in various parts of the province there is now little demand for direct relief in most rural areas but a number of the cities and towns will require further assistance.

WHEN A WINDOW IS CHANGED ALL VIENNA KNOWS ABOUT IT

VIENNA, Austria June 1—When you change a window display in this city the whole body of pedestrians knows it, for it generally means a detour. Store windows open on a hinge just like a door. The salesgirl comes out into the street accompanied by one or two salesmen, one of whom carries the key to the window. The other salesman carries boxes of new goods that are to be displayed.

Pedestrians make a detour off the narrow sidewalk; the man with the key stands beside the open window, now stretched across the sidewalk, and is there to stop some passerby from unwittingly stepping through a plate of glass. The job completed, the window washer next comes out of the store with his rage and bucket of water and gets into motion. This done the plate glass is swung back into position and the world continues to revolve.

A beggar woman with a ten year old girl hanging onto her arm stands in front of one of the stores. She whispers a few pleading words to all who pass by, but it is noticeable that only men surrender to her appeal, or, to be more specific of fourteen who paid her money only one was a woman. This is probably due to the fact a man can reach into his pocket and feel for the correct amount of change, the proper coin, whereas a woman must stop, unlatch her pocketbook, fumble for the correct amount, all of which is a tedious task, and so most women are not giving alms to this beggar today. Then again, most women give alms in church, most men in the street.

Great Fear of Drafts

Hotel windows are double windows, with an upholstered bolster between them to keep out the draft. Europeans are afraid of a draft as Chinese are of getting their clothes wet. Rooms are stuffy as a consequence, badly ventilated and smell of ancient days and nights.

At the Dalmation winehouse, a cellarlike sort of place, the boy waiter knows more about wines than an American boy of equal age knows about the mechanics of an automobile. You have finished a small flask of Dalmation wine. The boy waiter wants to bring you another. He sniffs into the flask and can tell you what brand it is, its dryness or sweetness and its vintage.

Behind the bar are ten or more casks of wine. The bartender is a tall Serbian with black hair and black eyes, and he wears a soiled apron. Nobody drinks at the bar. You take a cane chair at a rough-hewn table, sip wine and eat Serbian food heavily impregnated with paprika and swimming in sauces.

At the variety theatre you learn how sophisticated are the Viennese. The stage is a huge one, broad but not too deep, though tremendously high. Advertisements are flashed onto the screen before the performance commences. Why it should be nobody knows nor questions, but why the larger than life-sized figure of a nude woman should be used to advertise tea is one of those little complexities that make life a perpetual question. Another picture of a nude woman is more understandable, for she is advertising bath towels.

Bicycle Acts Prominent

Bicycle acts and clowning and acrobatics dominate the program. They are all good, but the acts present nothing not already known by heart to all Chicago loop theatregoers. The orchestra is large, but not as large as formerly, for musicians are heavily taxed. One theatre that used to have a ninety-piece orchestra now contented itself with one-third of this number.

During the interval, which in Viennese theatres is called a "pause," much beer is consumed. This is all draught beer and is served by handsome young ladies on the mezzanine floor. One young lady is understood to talk English, for the word "Englische," is worked onto her uniform, but she doesn't seem to have acquired much "face" from her superior knowledge, for she spends her time during the "pause" in washing beer steins and glasses.

As in France you are expected to tip the cloakroom attendant when you give her your hat and coat at the beginning of the show and not after, for the jam is enormous and she might lose too much money. In France you also have to tip the woman who shows you into your reserved seat, but that is not true in Austria. Strange how the Austrians have overlooked this opportunity to add to their long list of perquisites.

Theatres open promptly at 7.30 p.m. or at 8 p.m., and since most Viennese do not dine until 8 o'clock in the evening, meals are to be taken at the theatre. All theatre posters are as specific in announcing the times at which shows are over as they are in announcing the opening time.
