and good feeling along inter-denominational lines.

The last speaker of the evening but by no means the least eloquent was Rev. J. S. McArthur, travelling Presbyterian minister in New Brunswick. Mr. McArthur in his address said that he was delighted at the evidence of good feeling expressed by members of both denominations. He pointed out the fact that fundamental principles of the Presbyterian and Roman Catholic church were practically the same and the tolerance and good feeling between the two bodies would do much to cement Christian charity in the community. He went on to state that the way a man lived in this life was much more important in regard to his saving his soul than was the fact that he belonged to any particular denomination. Mr. McArthur's address was one of the features of the evening and contained much food for thought along the lines which promoted this inter-denominational friendship.

The chairman, Leo F. Cain, made a very eloquent reply to Mr. McArthur's address and suggested that the meeting close by the singing of the National Anthem.

Old Times Recalled

UNCLE HENRY

The drive on behalf of the Boy Scout movement, now going on in this province is a reminder that one of the first New Brunswickers to take up the duties of a Boy Scout, was the late Henry Braithwaite, a native of Nashwaaksis and long a resident of this city. Then a boy in his early teens he made the acquaintance of Gabe Acquin of the St. Mary's Reserve, the most famous Malisete guide of his time. During the winter of 1855 Gabe had engaged to take the then Lieutenant-Governor, Hon. Thomas Henry Manners-Sutton, on a hunting trip to the head of the Peniac stream and Henry was persuaded to go along as an assistant. When the party reached camp the discovery was made that an important part of the commissary had been left behind in the settlement, and young Braithwaite was given a toboggan and sent back to retrieve it. He had to make a thirteen mile jaunt on foot, dragging a toboggan, which was some job for a boy of thirteen. To make matters worse a blizzard set in during the return trip which added to the difficulties of locomotion. However, he proved himself worthy of the confidence reposed in him, and at a late hour made his way into the campyard, his mission having been an entire success. He was almost tuckered out as a result of his long hike, but his spirits revived somewhat when the governor and party turned out and gave him a hearty cheer, which convinced him that he had performed a useful service.

Mr. Braithwaite spent over seventy years of his life in the woods, and was the first white man to guide a non-resident sportsman on a hunting trip to New Brunswick. As "great oaks from little acorns grow" the occupation in which he was the first to engage has become of much importance. The province now receives a direct revenues from non-resident sportsmen in excess of $100,000 per year, and a much larger sum is paid to guides, hotel keepers, merchants and hotel men. As a Boy Scout Henry was a success and he was equally successful as an old Scout in his later years.

A Press Tribute

Mr. Braithwaite passed away on January 2nd, 1927, at the ripe old age of 87 years. The Daily Mail on the day following his death paid him this merited tribute:

A LANDMARK GONE

"In the death of Uncle Henry Braithwaite who passed away suddenly at his home in this city early on Sunday morning, New Brunswick lost its foremost guide and big game hunter and Canada its greatest master of woodcraft. The late Mr. Braithwaite had earned his living in the woods for upwards of seventy years, first as a lumberman and later as a guide and trapper. As a moose caller and authority on the habits of wild animals and birds, he was without a peer in this province. As a hunter, trapper and sportsman's guide he was in the very front rank and had almost a world wide reputation. For many years Mr. Braithwaite was associated with the late Mr. Edward Jack, C.E., of this city, in forest surveying and shared that gentleman's extensive knowledge on all subjects pertaining to the timber resources of New Brunswick. During his long career he had guided many noted sportsmen in the woods of this province including members of the English nobility, and it can be truthfully said that he did much more than his share to make the recreational attractions of this splendid province known and appreciated abroad.

"Uncle Henry" as he was familiarly called, never had even a common school education but acquired a wealth of knowledge in the great outdoors and in close association with nature. A man of high intelligence, and possessed of a keen sense of humor, he could readily adapt himself to any situation. All his life he was a great booster for New Brunswick and it is doubtful if any man now living in the province has provided material for so many newspaper and magazine articles. The tourist attractions of the province were indebted to him for much valuable publicity. On several occasions he attended sportsmen's shows in large American cities, travelling at his own expense, and devoting his time to boosting the resources of the province. His genial personality and extensive knowledge of woodcraft and familiarity with the habits of wild animals, won for him thousands of friends and admirers, many of whom he never saw. New Brunswick has lost one of the most remarkable characters of this generation in the death of Henry Braithwaite, and may never look upon his like again."
