THINGS TO CONSIDER

In 1930 Mr. Bennett said: "I will drive our products into the markets of the world." The following comparison will speak for itself:

Under the Liberal Government, 1925-1930, the imports into Canada were $5,581,130,376; the total exports were $6,279,830,614; the total trade was $11,860,960,990; the average annual total trade was $2,372,192,193.

Under the Conservative Government from 1930 to 1935 the imports into Canada were $2,857,878,701; the total exports were $3,097,046,493; the total trade was $5,954,925,194; the average annual total trade was $1,190,985,038.

Under the tariff policies of the Conservative Government of Mr. Bennett Canadian trade has fallen to one half the level it reached during the Liberal administration of Mr. King.

This decline in trade has made your taxes more burdensome. Not only that, but fewer taxes have been collected because incomes were lower and fewer goods were exchanged.

The National Debt rose by $500,000,000 during the Conservative administration from 1930 to 1935, while it was reduced by $250,000,000 under the Liberal Governments of Mr. King.

THE TERRITORY PROBLEM

While waiting for something specific to come out of the deliberations at Geneva, it may be profitable to review once more the Italian position, which is inferentially that of Germany also.

When the League of Nations was organized, the world was poured into a mold. It had all been divided; every square foot that was worth anything was in the possession of some nation. Under the Covenant, "the territorial integrity and existing political independence" of all members of the League was recognized. No way, therefore, was provided which an expanding population, desiring room in which to grow, could acquire it.

The first nation to try to break the mold and find territory into which to expand was Japan. She succeeded, however, in her own estimation, in evading the strict letter of the Covenant. The new Japanese-controlled state "declared its independence" of China, and Japan still holds that Manchukuo is an independent nation.

Now comes Italy and says: "We must have room in which to expand. We were promised long before the World War, a free hand in Ethiopia. Since the war we have made treaties with her, under which we are entitled to economic and commercial privileges which have not been granted."

"Ethiopia is a vast land, underpopulated and even savage. It requires reclamation by European civilization. It is absurd to withhold all this good land from use when Italy needs it. We have tried in every way to persuade the Ethiopians to let us in, for their own good as well as for ours. They have rejected all our proffers; they have not even kept their pledged engagements."

"Now, if we can get what we require through the League, well and good. If not, we shall take it in spite of the League, which, in its present form, protects those nations which have all the land they need, and makes no provision for the expansion of growing countries that must have room for growth."

To which Great Britain and many other League members reply: "You signed the Covenant. You agreed to respect the territorial integrity of all League members. Ethiopia is a member of the League. You signed the Pact of Paris, renouncing war. You have given your word and you must keep it."

There lies the conflict, and it no doubt exists in the mind of Benito Mussolini as it exists in those of the men who would prevent war by holding Italy to her engagements. It is practically certain that Mussolini does not want war if he can achieve his ends by other means. He would like to keep the League of Nations, the Stresa engagements, the Locarno pacts. But he also would like to secure a protectorate in Ethiopia, which has been denied him by the Covenant of the League—which, by the way, was signed by Italy before Mussolini came into power.

The five-power commission is now trying to work out a plan by which Mussolini can be satisfied without going to war with Ethiopia—a war which, under the Covenant and under the Pact of Paris is a violation of solemn pledges. The question to be solved is, how an expanding nation can find room in which to grow.

The fight is merely one to secure more real estate. Is it worth killing men to get this result?

SNAPSHOTS

The taxi drivers could tell some strange stories of midnight adventures if they would only do so but it would be bad business.

Who was the sporty old married man with a good job who left the pink wearing apparel in the car. His wife was rather shocked to find "them" there in the morning. They did not fit her.

The man who travels through Carleton and Victoria Counties is not half as popular with the fair sex as he imagines. If he does not let up on what he imagines is his "killing ways" he will be out of a job before long. Take a hint, old boy, you are rather old for that kind of stuff.

Dr. Frances Fish says she will slip in between John Barry and John Creaghan. It will be a tight squeeze, Frances.

Did the Telephone Company check up yet on the alleged rotten service in the Petersville—Hoyt Station area?

Minto citizens point out how an improved road via Richibucto Road and Albright's Corner would help our trade.

Those who went to see the nudists at the exhibition were fooled as they deserved to be.

Some people will not work as long as they have a dole to fall back on. We had an instance of this today.

The father of several children should take his money home to them instead of spending it at the House of Iniquity Number Two on the cross street up town.

BENEFIT TO TOURISTS

The provincial forestry department which have a foresters' lodge at Glenwood, near Oliver Siding on the highway between St. Leonard's and Campbellton, have also equipped this year a free tourist camp for the benefit of tourists and others who pass along this highway. The camp is nicely arranged with all the modern facilities and has an adjoining stone fireplace which is used for cooking purposes. During the present season more than one hundred tourists have availed themselves of these free camping privileges. If it is possible to do so the department proposes to establish similar camps for tourists in other parts of the province. These camps are similar to many which may be seen along the highways throughout the State of Maine.

GAME SEASON OPEN

The New Brunswick big game season will open on Monday, with deer and bear, ducks, geese and brant as the quarry. The season for hunting deer will last until November 30. The advance guard of hunters already have entered the woods and are making ready for the opening. The coming weekend will see the sportsmen shining up the old rifle and packing the knapsack for an early trek into the woods. The usual influx of American sportsmen after deer and moose will not commence for several weeks.

FAIR FANCIES

programme and discovered that the hard-boiled, swearing, tearing animal trainer of story books is not always true to life. In discussing the Fair in general we found the Captain a quiet sociable sort of a man—really interested in putting over his part of the Exhibition and hopeful of good weather during the week.

That is not to say, of course, that the Captain lacks the gift of action—as evidence, an experience of his at Palisades Park, New Jersey, this present season. Captain Walker had just moved his animals and equipment into a park for a two-weeks engagement. The big cage was set up on a special platform in the middle of the park. An hour remained before the act was due to go on. There would be an extra large attendance that day. A leading New York City department store was playing host to some 1,500 underprivileged children. Then somebody yelled "Fire!" And a real fire there was, too. Within a few moments half the lightly constructed frame buildings of the Park were ablaze and 1,500 children were reaching that state of panic which means disaster. At that moment Captain Walker came to the fore. With the psychology which makes the true showman, he had a special announcement broadcast over the length and breadth of the Park and prepared to go on immediately with his mixed animal act. And go on he did. For a fateful twenty minutes he held the interested of 1,500 well-nigh uncontrollable youngsters until such time as companies of police and fire departments had arrived on the scene. Captain Walker had the presence of mind to see what should be done and the cold nerve to go ahead and do it. By riveting the attention of the kiddies upon the big cage while the ominous tongue of flame licked higher and higher he averted what might easily have been one of the major disasters of the American amusement industry. And all this was accomplished in the face of the instinctive fear of fire which wild beasts possess.
