HARVEY STUDIO

THE DERVISH AND THE SULTAN

(R. Emmett Buckley) A Dervish was sitting upon the sand While a skeleton lay near by, Oh, he studied the dry and bleached out form, And he heaved a long drawn sigh.

Now thinking aloud he quoth to himself

As he sat 'neath the burning sun: 'What a useless frame man leaves behind

When the course of his life is run.

When this skull had a brain, this frame a heart,

I wonder the currents within. Has this been a mansion of joy and love,

Or a hovel that sheltered sin.

Ere the last pasis we find.'

A Sultan happened to pass by the way And on seeing the Dervish there: 'Oh fool, of what are you thinking,' he asked,

With a scathing and haughty air

I was thinking, sire," the Dervish said.

'That the skeleton here you see, Once may have been a Sultan like

Or only a fool, like me.

The Case of Sergeant Hickey

Why was not Hickey, of the 4th Battalion awarded a posthumous V.C.? Was he recommended for that award? 9 33 I heard his story from his battalion in September, 1915, four months after the action; and you will find it on 67,433.88 pages 128 and 129 of "Canada in Flanders," Vol I, more or less as I heard it and wrote it. If this account is a true one-and I have never heard a 715.45 denial of it-one more V.C. should have been awarded in the spring of 1915. (I am not the author of Vol 1. 867.74 of "Canada in Flanders," but there is 8,136.20 no denying the fact that I contributed to it.) 9.003.94
