CLARA SAVAGE LITTLEDALE GUEST AT "AMERICA'S LITTLE HOUSE"

Is Editor of Parents' Magazine

Mrs. Clara Savage Littledale, editor of The Parents' Magazine, will be interviewed by Mary Madison, "America's Little House" hostess, during a broadcast over the WABC-Columbia network, Monday, August 12 from 4:00 to 4:15 P. M., A. S. T. She will tell why the "Little House" is ideally suited to family requirements and what must be considered when planning a home.

After her graduation from Smith College, Mrs. Littledale became a reporter and later women's page editor on the New York Post. A few years later found her associate editor of Good Housekeeping. The magazine sent her abroad for a year to gather and write material for it. On her return she undertook the adventurous career of a free-lance writer and was married to Harold A. Littledale, Pulitzer Prize winner and member of the editorial staff of the New York Times. Four years of writing, homemaking and the care of a small daughter and son followed and then Mrs. Littledale assumed the editorship of Parents' Magazine.

Although Mrs. Littledale goes to her office every day her work brings her close to her other "job" at home. Through constant contact with all that is going on in the field of child care and homemaking she has gained a store of knowledge and a broad point of view.

A Dance by Henry Ford

Journalistic activities brought me several times into contact with Henry Ford, and I conceived a very high admiration for him. Other people have been inclined to decry his general grasp of matters of public interest, and have said that he was incapable of sustained or useful conversation on anything except mechanics or those matters which spring directly from the business. I never found him so. He impressed me as having the ordinary man's simple and direct understanding of public questions. He possesses many of the qualities that characterized the late Calvin Coolidge. Especially is he notable, as was that statesman for going direct to the heart of an issue and dismissing it with a phrase or two. His opinions are the fruit of the mental operations of a singularly simple and direct nature.

One time I drove with my wife and a niece from the Middle West out to his Wayside Inn, just outside of Boston. On arriving, we found Mr. and Mrs. Ford sitting quietly by the big kitchen fireside, conversing. When he saw me he came over, and we chatted a while, and then, finding that the young girl who was with us had never been through the Inn, he volunteered to show it to her personally. Accordingly we all fell in behind him and went from room to room, he meanwhile explaining the various articles of furniture and antique trappings, with which he had equipped the house. When we came to the ballroom, in which Lafayette is said to have danced, he talked a little while about it and then, turning rather wistfully to his wife, he said: "Mother, do you think our friends would like to see us dance the old-time dances which I have been trying to popularize?" Of course we joined in a chorus of approval, and putting a record into the phonograph which was in the room, he and Mrs. Ford danced polkas, mazurkas and scottisches all of which have disappeared from the tepsich-

HYPNOSIS BELIEVED USED IN MURDER

VIENNA, August 10—Suspected of having killed two women by hypnosis, Zakab, a professional hypnotizer of Klush, Roumania, was arrested, according to the Viennese newspaper, Wiener Zeitung.

Aloysia Bikpalovi, who lived with Zakab, died July 12. Zakab appeared before the authorities and said that Aloysia, in the presence of four witnesses, willed him her entire fortune, estimated at $20,000.

Marie Milescu, a friend of Aloysia, dropped dead Monday while climbing stairs to Police Headquarters. She was about to make a statement concerning Aloysia's death, police believe. Investigation by police revealed that Zakab stood on the other side of the street, glaring at the woman when she collapsed.

rean fashion of the day. It always seemed to me a singular evidence of the simplicity of the man that he should set aside his great industrial and financial greatness and dance for the delectation of a handful of friends.—Christian Science Monitor.
