CRANBERRIES

The local market today was full of cranberries and they were quickly grabbed up. As has already been stated by The Daily Mail there should be a large market in this province for cranberries provided the raising of such fruit were properly promoted and encouraged. Thousands of bushels of cranberries are imported into this province yearly which could well have been raised here. There is a great chance right here in York and Sunbury counties to develop a market for these berries. Why not try it?

PROMISES OR PERFORMANCE?

If Canadian electors give rein to their memories they will not be misled by Conservative statistics based on 1933 conditions and certain percentages of improvement since then. It is a crude appeal to credulity to pretend that anything better than the darkest year of all is a cause for rejoicing when the best of the past five years is incomparable with what the people have learned from experience to regard as their rights.

The political campaign is being befuddled not only by many parties but with many specious appeals, when the real and only issue worth considering is whether the record of the Bennett Government stands up in public service with that of the other permanent party headed by Mr. King.

The Prime Minister made promises in 1930. He made more last January, he is promising again. What have these promises done for the people in the past? Is there any warrant in experience that they will do better in the future? He has attacked the Liberal platform as offering nothing new. Right here the issue is nailed down. The Liberal Leader pointed out in his broadcast reply that Liberal policies are continuous and so broad in scope that they provide for changing conditions. They are founded on human needs. Mr. Bennett is offering expediency topping destructive doctrines which he declines to change. Mr. King is offering proof that under Liberal policies the country has prospered and would do so again.

Mr. Bennett wants to return to power to safeguard the Empire agreements and complete trade negotiations with the United States. He has said so. He points out that trade to the Empire has gained since 1933. He does not show that it is deplorably less than when his predecessors were in office, that the British preference policy has been immeasurably more profitable than his bilateral policy—great improvement that this has been in a regime otherwise committed to isolation. It has remained for Mr. King to point that out, while Mr. Bennett has been pursuing his economic nationalism and making promises since the Empire Conference of 1932, Great Britain has negotiated twenty-five trade agreements with foreign nations, the United States, in a little more than a year, has negotiated half a dozen; Brazil, twenty-six; Finland, seven; and Argentina, five. The nations want to trade, are prepared to do so, but they cannot make agreements with a country whose policies, as are those under Mr. Bennett, prohibit a broad conception of trade values.

The Conservative Leader is now planning for a continuance of administration within the limitations of conditions created during the past five years. An analysis of his speeches makes this clear. He has no faith in the future, which he is obliged to measure by the effects of his own doctrines. He cannot anticipate a renewal of the $2,500,000,000 worth of foreign trade experienced in 1928-29. How could he? Expansion like this does not fit into his circumscribed "Canada First" program. The slogan has to be preserved, even though the people suffer.

The Liberal platform, as Mr. King explained, has not failed in the past, and it stands good today. It is not his platform alone, but of the party, no matter who leads. Surely these two points mean much to an electorate anxious for relief from a hopeless condition.

When checking up on the automobiles again the R. C. M. P. should pay special attention to "one-eyed" cars. These are a menace to traffic and there are altogether too many of them running around the roads loose.

We just heard of a local man who travels and put up at hotels along the way. When he first started on the road he used to ask the hotels for a rebate for such items on the menu as he did not like.

We asked a man today who he was going to vote for in the coming election and he answered: Ralph Gunter and pensions.

A Cub reporter recently referred to "Rev. Dr. Ross of Saint Dunstan's Church". Saint Dunstan's might do worse than take on the popular Presbyterian pastor who takes with everyone.

Italian fleet maneuvers revive allusions to the Mediterranean as "Mare Nostrum". We always supposed this to be a horse medicine.

would agree to move his Libyan troops from the Egyptian frontier London in turn would withdraw some of its warships from the Mediterranean. Because of this, it was said, Mussolini has decided to postpone until next week a proposed protest to the League against the additions to the British fleet in the Mediterranean.

Should Italy and Britain reach an agreement on the Libya-Egyptian question well-informed circles in Geneva believe it would have a favorable effect upon the atmosphere surrounding the Italo-Ethiopian dispute. The atmosphere was tense here, meanwhile, as Geneva waited for the Italian cabinet to act today on the League's peace proposal.

France Appeals

France last night made a strong plea to Premier Mussolini to accept League of Nations peace proposals in the Italo-Ethiopian crisis.

In a two-hour interview with Mussolini, Count Charles de Chambrun, French ambassador, emphasized that by accepting the proposals of the League five-power committee Italy would be preparing the way for future expansion.

Sir Eric Drummond, British ambassador, also had a long conversation with Fulvio Suvich, under-secretary of state for foreign affairs.

A survey of Italy's prospects to finance a possible war against Ethiopia disclosed today private financial sanctions have already been virtually applied against Rome by other European nations.

But in Rome a spokesman for the Italian government said Italy was able and ready to go ahead with its program "without economic help from anyone".

Financial authorities said Britain has already unofficially closed financial doors to Italy.

A French financial authority said: "If there is any lending power left in the French pocket, the French government itself needs it. We would find it hard to refuse Mussolini anything, but France herself needs money".

U. S. Not Enthusiastic

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 21—A survey of opinion here yesterday revealed that many officials believe nations in search of war financing will not find it in the United States.

With the memory of United States loans in the last Great War and the fact of continuing defaults by European debtors in mind, and the Johnson law acting rigidly against it, they saw slim possibility of future war loans.

The Johnson Act prohibits any nation in default on its war debts to the United States government from obtaining any loans or other financial assistance in the country.

OUR MAIL BAG

GLORIOUS 104TH REGIMENT

Southampton, N. B.,
September 19, 1935

Editor Daily Mail,
Fredericton, N. B.

Dear Sir:
Will you please accept my little article for your esteemed publication?—esteemed for its work in the onward course of your city and our country. I'd like to see your principles taught in a wide, wide circle!

I'm sorry there is not time to get this typewritten but the unveiling of the 104th monument is so near! My expression may take better just now.

The other day when we reached Fredericton we saw the Memorial to the 104th built half way up to its completion. I was over-whelmed with its significance.

It seems so fitting for it to be set up on that side of the city that saw them depart on their famous enterprise. I can see them taking their course around the turn of the road above the site of the monument.

The Duke of Wellington regretted he was not one of their number.

I one time asked Mr. Miller, who owned the land where our school house stands, and with great pride he answered: "My grandfather John Miller of the 104th Regiment received a grant of that property." The admiration of the world for those heroes will never die! But they did a greater thing for our country, they left an example of courage, fortitude and perseverance to succeeding generations so much needed in these times of stress. So we will keep in mind their glorious example and do our best to surmount the depression of these days. But one department alone cannot accomplish this. All must help.

Yours truly,
(Mrs.) ADA G. B. GRANT.

THE CITY WHARF

Fredericton, Sept. 20, 1935
Editor, Daily Mail.

Dear Sir:

While the City Council was negotiating for a city dump we wonder that they did not notice the unsightly hole at the lower side of the city wharf behind the city hall. If a retaining wall was built along the front of this place and filled up with the other wharf removed to the back of town where space is not so much in demand and all this space used for parking, we will have solved the parking question. Any one in the city market last Saturday and noted the truck loads of wood and other cars parked in front of some of our business houses to the extent of hindering them in carrying on their business, will realize that the parking situation will have to be attended to. The question of a winter road might be raised. This can be overcome, as last winter the road, came off the ice below the place mentioned, and by building an approach to the side of the wharf mentioned a good winter road can still be in use.

Look the situation over some fine day, City Fathers, and see if an unsightly bogen hole cannot be turned into valuable property.

PARKING.

SHOWS IMPROVEMENT

Improvement is shown today in the condition of David Jones, who has been recuperating at the Victoria Hospital from injuries received some weeks ago at his home.
