DUCHESS ABLE TO GO SHOPPING

London, July 19—"There was something in the air on the other side of dull," said the Duchess of Connaught the other day. Since she has become convalescent. Her Royal Highness is doing things she never did before she went to Canada. She now does much of her own shopping, in the company usually of some intimate friend. Shopping the duchess avers, is a fine cure for the "blues" from which she has suffered more or less since she has been back in England. In a great temple of frocks in Dover Street the other morning, the duchess walked leisurely about through avenues of beautiful gowns and opera cloaks. People were beginning to fly out of town when suddenly came the announcement in the court circular that the king and queen intended to give another court ball this month. This was done with the sole object of keeping the world and his wife in London until the close of the season. His burning desire to do his duty is making an old man of the king. He is looking ten years older than he really is.
