started home Billy sat on the front seat. He drove with the hitching strap tied to the railing of the dashboard, flourished the whip and yelled with delight. At first Sinton laughed with him, but by the time he left Elnora with several packages at her gate he was looking serious enough.

Margaret was at the door as they drove up the lane. Sinton left Billy in the carriage, hitched the horses and went to explain to her. He had not reached her before she cried, "Look, Wesley, that child! You'll have a run-

Wesley looked and ran. Billy was standing in the carriage slashing the mettlesome horses with the whip.

"See me make 'em go!" he shouted as the whip fell a second time.

He did make them go. They took the hitching post and a few fence palings, which scraped the paint from a wheel. Sinton missed the lines at the first effort, but the dragging post impeded the horses, and he soon caught them. He led them to the barn and ordered Billy to remain in the carriage while he unhitched. Then leading Billy and carrying his packages he entered the yard.

"You run play a few minutes. Billy," he said. "I want to talk to the nice didn't cost a dollar.'

"A dollar is a good deal when you work for it the way we do.

"Well, I don't know a better place to put it. Have you got any hot wa er? I'll use this tub at the cisteru Please give me some soap and towels." Instead Margaret pushed by him with a shriek. Billy had played by producing a cord from his pocket, and. having tied the tails of Margaret's white kittens together, he had climbed on a box and hung them across the clothesline. Wild with fright, the kit tens were clawing each other to death and the air was white with fur. The string had twisted, and the frightened reatures could not recognize friends Margaret stepped back with bleeding hands. Sinton cut the cord with his knife, and the poor little cats raced under the house bleeding and disfigured. Margaret, white with wrath, faced Sinton.

"If you don't hitch up and take that animal back to town," she said, "I

Billy threw himself on the grass and began to scream.

"You said I could have fried chicken for supper," he wailed. "You said she was a nice lady."

Sinton lifted him, and something in his manner of handling the child infuriated Margaret. His touch was so gentle! She reached for Billy and grip ped his shirt collar in the back. Sin ton's hand closed over hers.

"Gently, girl!" he said. "This little body is covered with sores."

"Sores!" she ejaculated. "Sores What kind of sores?"

"Oh, they might be from bruises made by fists or boot toes, or they might be bad blood from wrong eating. or they might be pure filth. Will you hand me some towels? 'No. I won't," said Margaret. "Well, give me some rags, then." Margaret compromised on pieces of old tablecloth. Sinton led Billy to the cistern, pumped cold water into the tub, poured in a kettle of hot and, beginning at the head, scoured him. The boy shut his little teeth and said never a word, though he twisted occasionally when the soap struck a raw spot. Margaret watched the process from the window in amazed and ever increasing anger.
