The 100th Anniversary of David Livingstone's Birth

One hundred years ago on the 19th of this month, David Livingstone was born at Blantyre Works, a small village in Lanarkshire, Scotland. At ten years of age, and at a time when there was no factory legislation relative to child labor, this boy, living in a humble workman's home, set about preparing himself for something better than the drudgery of a grinding cotton mill. His parents aided him by every means in their power and many an hour he spent over his books which his employers and parents often thought he ought to have given to sleep. At the age of twenty-three his thirteen years' ceaseless toil and ceaseless study fitted him for the university and he took medicine and Greek at Glasgow University. He then went to London for he was fired with the missionary spirit, was accepted by the London Missionary Society, but determined to finish his university course before embarking on his work. In 1840 he secured his medical degree at Glasgow, making an excellent showing in all the examinations.

He was very anxious to go to China, but, as he himself often remarked in later years, "The Lord knew better where he was needed." and in 1841, with a rather doubting heart, he went to Bechuanaland, settling first at Kuruman, where thirty years before the famous Robert Moffat had established a mission.

From this time forward the life of David Livingstone was one of real romance and adventure. One of the strongest features of this great and good man was that, although in personal appearance he was unassuming and ungainly, the moment one spoke to him the winning personality of the man was apparent, and so it came to pass that he dwelt in peace among savages, he penetrated their unknown forests, desert, mountain and plain, he faced the fierce slave-dealers of Central Africa, and never fired a shot in defence or attempted to take a human life. He held strongly to the idea that a Christian missionary should be a pioneer, exploring and opening up new fields and placing converted and trained natives in charge. Following up this idea, he travelled much and in 1844 he married Mary, the daughter of Robert Moffat of Kuruman. They made Mabotsa their centre of work. About this time it was that in an encounter with a lion he had his arm broken. It was imperfectly set, causing him at times much trouble, but it was a sure means of his identification after death.

In 1847 he moved to a point 40 miles north of Mabotsa, the whole tribe going with him, and shortly thereafter began one of his most historic journeys in the interior of Africa, when, with Messrs. Oswell and Murray, two British travellers, he started to search for a lake they had heard about. After nearly two years' travel through forest and jungle, Lake Ngami was reached in 1849. Then commenced three years of wandering accompanied by his wife and children, when a tributary of the Zambesi and then the great Zambesi itself were really discovered and the vast area charted. In 1852, after seeing his wife and children off to Britain, he once more turned his face to "darker Africa." From this time forward he became more of an explorer and carrier of good tidings than a missionary. Story after story of his discoveries, his corrections of existing maps of parts of Africa, his sketches of the various tribes and peoples he met were sent to the Royal Geographical Society in London and to other bodies of scientists and discoverers.

Suffered From Boils, Constipation And Sick Headache.

There is no more frequent source of illness than that arising from bad blood. When the blood becomes impure the whole system is impure; boils and pimples break out, the bowels become constipated, and the head aches more or less.

Do not neglect to purify the blood on the first appearance of a pimple or boil. Cleanse it thoroughly by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters and thus prevent untold suffering.

Mr. D. M. McBlaine, Niagara Falls, Ont., writes:—"It is with pleasure I testify to the sterling qualities of your Burdock Blood Bitters. After the Boer War, through which I served in the 1st L.I., I suffered from boils, constipation, and sick headaches, and tried many preparations, but got relief from none till an old comrade of mine got me to try the Burdock Blood Bitters. To say I got relief is to put it mildly. It made me myself again, viz., a man who knows not what it is to be sick, and who has been, and is still, an athlete."

"To anyone in want of purified blood and the resultant all round vigorous health I can conscientiously recommend B.B.B." Get the 3 B's. Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Honors began to be conferred on him which he cared little for, and was some times a year or more in hearing of them. He was not daunted by disease nor turned back by threats of slave-dealers, and by 1855 he was able to sketch the great river centre of Africa so accurately that few important changes have been necessitated by later discoveries. On his journey towards the Portuguese coast for his first return trip to Britain he discovered the falls on the Zambesi River now known as the Victoria Falls, said to be the largest in the world.

He reached Britain on December 12, 1856, and published the story of his wonderful travels. He severed his connection in 1877 with the London Missionary Society, with which, however, he remained in perfect harmony till his death. In 1858 he was appointed British Consul for "eastern parts of Africa," and given charge of an expedition through Zambesi, and in this work even more wonderful and romantic incidents are recorded than in his previous travels. Mrs. Livingstone and family were with him. The horrors of the slave-dealers' work made a great impression on Livingstone's mind and he never ceased until he had the Christian world aroused to these horrors and united to put an end to the evils. Mrs. Livingstone died at Shupanea on April 27, 1862, and this made the explorer desire to return to Britain and settle down and in July, 1861, he arrived in London, where he was most enthusiastically welcomed. Sir Roderick Murchison and other friends persuaded him to return to Africa again and this he did in August, 1865.

Early in April, 1866, he left Zambesi for one of the most entrancing and hazardous journeys he ever undertook. This journey lasted three years before he reached a place to settle and there he fixed for a time his headquarters in Ujiji. He says he was nothing but "a knuckle of bones" on reaching the spot. In one of his journeys from Ujiji he visited several places and describes how at one of them the slave-dealers raided a village, shooting the women by the hundred. This story so thrilled Europe that a determined attempt by Britain to try and stop the horrors was eventually successful. No news of Livingstone having reached the outside world for two years, Mr. Gordon Bennett of The New York Herald, commissioned Henry M. Stanley to "go and find Livingstone" an assignment he carried out after many adventures, resulting in a story that thrilled the world. With Stanley further explorations were made, and then Stanley went back to report. Livingstone continued his explorations and in January, 1873, the veteran and his brave followers were entangled in the jungle near Lake Bangwulu. From here he was carried on a litter and on April 27, 1873, he made his last entry in his diary, as follows: "Knocked up quite and remain—recover—sent to buy milk goats. We are on the banks of the Mohlamba." On April 30 he with difficulty wound up his watch and on May 1, 1873, the boys found the Great Master, as they had called him, kneeling beside his bed. He died praying. His faithful followers preserved the body, carried it to the coast, and one of them, Jacob Wainwright, travelled on the warship that brought the body back to Britain, where, on April 18, 1874, amid universal signs of a nation's sorrow, it was laid to rest in Westminster Abbey.

MAY ADMIT LUMBER FREE OF DUTY

Boston, March 17—Boston importers and manufacturers were greatly interested tonight in the announcement of the Democratic plans for the revision of the tariff next month. Lumber importers say that the new tariff will favorably affect the New Brunswick lumber trade and the entire Canadian print paper industry.

Democratic leaders say that rough and dressed lumber, hewn and squared timber, shingles, laths and fence posts will be made free and the duties on other classes of wood will be materially lowered. Wood pulp, print paper, and wood are also to go on the free list and a reduction in lime duty, and certain farm products anticipated.

The Democratic leaders in congress propose to eliminate all restrictions as to reciprocity.
