Victoria, B. C., June 4-The prep-1 arctic expedition, and Dr. R. M. arations for the Canadian Arctic expedition under the command of Vilhjalmur Stefansson are practically completed and within a few days the intrepid explorer, accompanied by steamer for Nome, Alaska, to join the other members of the expedition who are now waiting for their ship, the 247-ton steam whaler Karluk to the 247-ton steam whaler Karluk, to sail from Esquimault, B. C., where the ship was overhauled and equipped for its arctic voyage to Nome, the rendezvous of the expedition.

The object of the expedition, which sails under the British flag and the cost of which is entirely defrayed by to find the pole, but to ascertain, if possible, the existence of a large which, many scientists believe, surof it in the name of Canada. To do this work thoroughly, five noted expedition. The list includes J. J. O'Neill, a mining expert and geologist, who will incidentally explore the copper deposits on Victoria Island; George Malloch, an expert geologist who will try to ascertain the presence of coal deposits; James Mur-ray of Glasgow, the noted oceanographer and biologist, who had ac companied Lieut. Shackleton's ant-

Anderson, who will devote himself especially to the study of the blond Eskimos, discovered by Stefansson on a previous expedition.

Although two other expeditions with similar objects in view, the peditions, only friendly rivalry.
