RING CHAMPIONSHIP

San Francisco, June 24—What a terribly confused state the championships of the various pugilists classes are in. There is not a man at the head of any division who can boast that his title is clear of flaws.

McCarthy lost in the ring with Arthur Pelkey at Calgary on May 24, and truth to tell there is considerable mystery in regard to the cause of his taking off.

Passing over the gruesome features of the affair, the question is has Pelkey earned the right to call himself heavyweight champion of the world?

In this particular instance though it looks as though McCarthy, or some one else, imposed certain terms in order that the bout should not bear any resemblance of a championship match.

To begin with, it was to have been a ten-round affair. In the next place, eight-ounce gloves were used, and in the next it has transpired that an agreement existed if both men were on their feet at the end of the tenth round "no decision was to be rendered publicly."

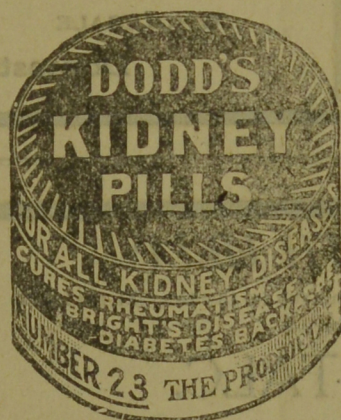

This is the tantamount to an admission that the principals did not consider they were about to participate in an orthodox championship match.

It may be said that after he has recovered from the shock of the experience Pelkey will claim the championship; but he is not likely to receive much homage from the public. He will find there is a desire to see him in action with some good man to determine whether there is anything in him and that is all.

Gunboat Smith has already claimed the title, but he has no better right to it than Pelkey. The heavyweight class is without a head, in fact, and the best thing to do is to arrange a series of matches, with Willard, Palmer, Smith and Pelkey as contestants, and have the matter cleaned up.

Henry B. Warner will open the second season in "The Ghost Breaker" in Boston next Labor Day, and will play continuously until the following June.

William A. Brady will open his thirty-ninth Street Theatre in New York in August with "Believe Me, Xantippe," a farce written by a Harvard University student.

Mr. Benjamin Tibbitts, the inventor and builder of the Reinder's engine—the high and low pressure combined by which a saving of steam is effected—will be highly gratified when he learns the success of his exertions.

Captain Bill Sweeney, of the Boston Braves, has been disabled many times this season and only his grit has kept him in the game.
