PETER FARRELL & CO.

LORD BERESFORD ON IMPERIAL COMMERCE

Advocates Resident Canadian Representatives for British Commercial Houses also Larger Stocks.

London, April 8—Lord Beresford has just published a paper giving his ideas on how best trade may be developed between Canada and Great Britain. He suggests that British commercial houses should secure the highest grade, resident commercial travellers and that catalogues and advertisements should be issued by the British houses, such as are found profitable by the Canadian and American concerns.

Longer terms of credit, he considers essential to the successful cultivation of the Dominion's trade and he would have the old Country firms establish branch industries in the Dominion, maintain larger stocks and when shipment across the Atlantic has to be done he would insist on the goods leaving promptly and everything possible being done to give rapid despatch and to ensure prompt delivery, which, he says, is an essential in dealing with Canadian customers.

PLAYED FARO TO HELP FREE THAW

New York, April 7—Clifford W. Hartridge, the lawyer who is suing Mrs. Mary C. Thaw to recover a balance of $94,000 for professional services, was treated to a severe cross-examination yesterday by L. Lafin Kellogg, counsel for Mrs. Thaw. This inquisition covered not only the expenditures made by Hartridge for the almost nightly entertainment of Harry Thaw's female friends of the Tenderloin prior to and during the first Thaw trial for the murder of Stanford White but also brought into question the professional conduct of Hartridge.

Mr. Hartridge said he regarded it as professional to visit places of questionable character or no character at all in order to put the denizens of such places, who had known Thaw in good humor when it was a question of saving Thaw's life or preventing his confinement in Matteawan.

"Do you think there is any justification for a man who has taken the oath and been admitted to the bar to spend 180 nights in such places?" in such places?" asked Mr. Kellogg. "Yes," replied Mr. Hartridge, "in a case of this kind."

Mr. Kellogg, asked if Mr. Hartridge had visited certain gambling places in the neighborhood of Forty-second Street. Mr. Hartridge thought he had a certain recollection of having done so.

"Did you play?"

"Oh, yes; I played faro once or twice."

One of the items in Mr. Hartridge's bill of particulars was $3,000 paid to his stenographer for overtime work and charged to the Thaw account. In explanation of this Hartridge said that his stenographer had worked nights, Sundays and holidays on the Thaw case and he deemed her entitled to extra compensation above her $20 a week.

"Mr. Hartridge, I see by your bill of particulars that you visited Thaw in the Tombs 550 times. The Tombs record shows only 127 visits from you. How do you reconcile your statement with the record?" asked Mr. Kellogg.

"I went there many times without signing my name in the book," Mr. Hartridge replied.

"Then you violated the rules of the Tombs something like 200 times?"

"I was not required to sign my name in the book every time I went to the Tombs."

Mr. Kellogg also wanted to know what became of all that law business which brought in Mr. Hartridge $25,000 a year for a period of five years prior to the Thaw tragedy. Hartridge said that he wound up all other business as soon as he accepted the Thaw retainer.

"I see on your bill here that you charged Thaw for getting a bag of letters for him," said Mr. Kellogg. "Do you not think a messenger could have gone for those letters?"

"No," replied Hartridge, "not such letters as those were. You would send a messenger boy for a bag of laundry but not for a bag of diamonds."

"Would you send a lawyer for a bag of diamonds?" was Mr. Kellogg's sarcastic query and the court smiled. "Yes, I think I would take the chance," said the witness.

Mr. Hartridge was asked to name the newspaper reporters with whom he talked in regard to the Thaw case and tried to influence in the Thaw interests, but he couldn't give any names, and added that he had never paid reporters anything to suppress stories prejudicial to Thaw.

Mr. Will D. McKay spent Thursday in St. John.

Mrs. W. T. Day, of Marysville, left on Thursday for Campbellton, where she will visit her daughter, Mrs. Jack Christie.

MR. MONK HITS TORONTO AT NEWS

Quebec Tory Leader Accuses Organ of Ascribing Its Own "Crooked Motives" to Others.

Fort Monroe, April 8—"Telegram received. Must confess that attacks and accusations coming from the fanatical organ you mention (the Toronto News) seem best treated with contempt. Have certainly differed with leader and majority of party on several important points, but frankly and without animosity. Never have demanded or sought concessions. We respect the principles of others and ask the same respect for our own. The News seems unable to understand this. I am told the editor is an adept in betrayals and calumnies, but this does not justify him in lending crooked motives to everyone else."

(Signed) F. D. MONK. The above is a copy of a telegram sent by Mr. F. D. Monk, M.P., in answer to a query sent to him by the Toronto Star today. It is induced by the Toronto News—Mr. Borden's organ—continued attack on the Conservative leader of Quebec.

Today also, the Toronto Star prints a long special from Ottawa giving what purports to be the inside story of the split in the Conservative party which, it charges, has been brought about by Mr. Borden's alleged lack of tact. The Star gives a detailed list of men who are said to be supporting Borden as well as the names of those who are said to be aspiring to succeed him. While the story contains nothing essentially new to the political gossip, who have been discussing it for weeks, its publication in formal manner is expected to give renewed interest to the discussion.

SOCIAL GOSSIP

On Wednesday evening, the Misses Lynch, Regent Street, entertained very pleasantly at a young people's bridge of nine tables. The party was given in honor of their guest, Mrs. Irene Robinson of Nelson, N. B. The prize winners were Miss Hazel Edgcombe and Mr. G. S. Grimmer.
