FOR SPORTSMEN

I have been appointed a vendor of game licenses for the New Brunswick Government, and will have licenses for sale on and after the morning of September 15th. I want resident and non-resident sportsmen to buy their licenses from me and I guarantee all a square deal. In addition to licenses I can fit sportsmen out with supplies for a hunting trip, and I can tell you where to go to get the game. I have a full camp equipment, which I will rent at a reasonable price. I can furnish you with lunches at short notice. If you want a lunch put up, just notify me. Patronize a brother sportsman who knows the game and you will be satisfied.

A HOLIDAY ROMANCE

BY MRS. WELLESLEY-SMITH

"I love you with all my heart, Cedric," she answered simply.

"Janet, I am proposing very badly, very clumsily, but you must for give me, for I have never done such a thing before. Darling, what is my answer to be? Do you care for me?" She raised her beautiful eyes shyly but apparently it was more than satisfactory, for he drew her into his arms and kissed her many, many times.

"What will your mother say?" Janet murmured. "She does not like me—she will be so angry."

"Why?" smiling.
"Because she naturally expected you to make a much better match than this one you are contemplating. I have no money; I am a mere nobody."

"I have plenty of money and you are the girl I love, which is quite sufficient for me or anyone else," Cedric said, with a sudden haughty lift of his head, a habit of his that Janet had often noticed. "My pet, we won't cross our bridges until we come to them. Tell me how soon will you marry me?"

"Not for a long time," she declared promptly. "I cannot—I must give a term's notice to the school people and—"

"That can be arranged," he said quietly.

"Janet I must have my own way in this. We will be married in exactly a month's time!"

"Nothing is impossible, and we'll borrow the cottage from my mother and have a delightful honeymoon in this dear little island. How would you like it?"

He held her close and whispered sweet assurances of his love, when they turned homeward and when at last Janet reached her room there was barely time to dress for dinner.

Sally, all ready, stood by the dressing-table.

"Why, Janet, you look radiant!" she exclaimed.

"Oh, Sally, I am so happy! Cedric loves me. He has asked me to marry him."

"And you said yes?"

"Of course. I love him dearly, dearly."

Sally kissed her warmly.

"Dear little girl! You deserve your joy!" she said.

CHAPTER V

"I suppose," Cedric said, gloomily surveying the letter he held, "that there's no help for it—I must go."

"You certainly ought to do so," his mother returned.

He sighed.

"I'm afraid you are right, mother, he returned, "but I wish my godfather had chosen some other time to discover that my presence is indispensable."

With a discontented frown.

"The last time I went rushing up to Scotland it was a simple liver attack, and now it is probably gout. How ever I will go at once. He was very good to me when I was a small shaver with no more idea of coming into a title than Adam."

Janet looked interested.

"Were you the direct heir?" she inquired.

"By no means, there were—Goodness, mother what a start you did give me. I'm afraid you've done for that unlucky cup and saucer."

"My slave caught it," Lady Alver said coldly, surveying the ruins at her feet. "I will have your bag packed immediately." She left the room in her usual stately fashion, and Sally slipped through the open French window leaving the lovers alone.

Cedric was not slow to take advantage of the opportunity; in a moment he was by Janet's side.

"My darling," he whispered fondly, "I cannot bear to leave you!"

"It will only be for a few days," she answered, sighing a little. Sally and I will explore this delightful island, and relieve your mother of the bother of entertaining us."

"I will write to you every day," her lover murmured fondly, drawing her into his arms.

"Janet, my sweet, will you miss me?"

"So much," murmured the girl tenderly.

"If you really wish it I'll send an excuse—"

"No, no, I must not be selfish. Go, Cedric, but come back as quickly as you can."

"You may be certain I shall do that, darling love. Kiss me, Janet, ever so many times," he commended. Blushing beautifully, she obeyed with her heart on her lips.

"Dearest, dearest, how I love you!" he said. "I am the most fortunate man in the world to have won so fair a bride."

"Flatterer"—laughing. "You will make me vain."

The lovers started apart as Lady Alver re-entered the room.

"I beg your pardon," she said formally. "Mold has packed your things. You have just time to catch the train to London. The yacht is ready"—turning to her son.

"The sooner I start the sooner I shall return," the young man said.

"Mother, I give Janet into your special charge; take care of her."

"It seems to me that Janet is very well able to take care of herself," her ladyship said unsympathetically. "I will do my best to amuse her until you come back."

"Put on your hat dearest, and see me off," Cedric said; and Janet, obeying gladly, and somewhat impetuously, nearly overturned her friend at the top of the stairs.

Sally followed her into the room, and watched Janet recklessly pulling her hats out of the wardrobe; then she said abruptly.

"Lady Alver broke that cup and saucer on purpose at breakfast, I saw her."

"But why?"

Janet was more interested in getting her headgear at a properly becoming angle.

—Maurice Hewlett, who has escaped being chosen as one of the first list of "immortals," or members of the English Literary Academy, has explained the lack of great poets in his land by the vast material wealth of the nation. "We are too comfortable and too prosperous," he said, "to be moved by the poet's forces, which have always been love, religion, and the spirit of the race." But "England's Maytime," as the Saturday Review once called the Elizabethan age, is not likely to return, and the forces which made it and its literature great can never again manifest themselves, or at any rate in the combination peculiar to that glowing expansive period. Nevertheless, new "experiments in civilization" may be relied upon to bring into the lives of nations forces which shall inspire new singers. Meantime poetry is more than ever the possession of the few "private souls."

NEEDLE WORK

Needlework and knitting have always been recognized by women as soothing occupation, that is, when they are not pursued under pressure of time or need. Now a further step has been taken and they have been definitely prescribed by doctors as a cure for 'nerves' When a woman is suffering from nerves as the result of the worry of housekeeping or the modern rush of social or business life, she is advised to take up light needle work as a cure.

Light needlework comes under the category of amusements, and is prescribed for the woman with nerve trouble by her doctor in the same way as golf, for instance; that is, as something to keep the mind interested without too much strain," a physician told the "Daily Mirror."

"Nerves are often caused by a woman having no definite occupation, and in such cases we advise light needlework as an occupation. For a very busy woman who is absorbed in the rush and turmoil of life we suggest it as a change of occupation."

"No woman should undertake the needlework cure, however, who has a distaste for it, and it should not be turned into a labor, in any case, or the required result would not be obtained. One of my patients grew so interested in her needlework that she would sit up until three o'clock in the morning to finish it. This was naturally about the worst thing she could do."

"I was so restless that I wandered about the house perfectly miserable," she said "until one day I decided to attempt needlework as a new occupation."
