you want a lunch put up, just notify me. Patronize a brother sportsman who knows the game and you will be satisfied.

W. A. LINDSAY*King St.*A HOLIDAY ROMANCE

BY MRS. WELLESLEY SMITH

"I never want to see him again!" cried Janet. "I have refused his very flattering offer, and there's an end of it." But had she known it, it was only the beginning of much that was to happen.

The very next day Sally and Janet crossed to Ventnor in Lord Al-ver's yacht, the Pearl. The motor was waiting at the pier when the boat came in.

Janet, in a plain blue linen coat and skirt, bought ready-made, and cut passably well, with a becomg hat to match on her red-gold locks, looked charmingly pretty and ladylike. Miss Prince, in severe and Puritan grey, with a black toque, was quite unconscious that she was worthy of admiration as well.

"This is the cottage," their host announced cheerfully. "Quite a primitive place, I assure you."
"It is a dear little house!" Janet declared. "Why, how funny!"

"What is funny?" he asked.

He had ushered the girls into the walled-in garden, through a small door, which he opened with his key.
Lady Alver was sitting in the shade of a large tree, and Janet recognized her instantly.

"Sally, that is the lady who bought ancestor Cosmo!" she murmured.

"So it is!" agreed Sally. "I wonder if she will remember the incident."

Their eager host led Janet forward.
"Mother," he said, with an air of pride, "this is Miss Ardenne."

Lady Alver rose slowly and held out her hand; her manner was indifferently cold and dignified.

"How do you do?" she said. "I am glad it is a fine day. The crossing is so disagreeable if at all rough—at least to me. Perhaps you are a good sailor, Miss Ardenne?"

"Indeed, I haven't had much opportunity of finding out. I have been on the sea very little." Then, with the frankness that characterized her, Janet added: "We have met before, Lady Alver."

"Really"—raising incredulous eyebrows. "I have no recollection of it."

"You bought a miniature from me," the girl smilingly returned.

"I buy so many," was the cold reply. "Miniatures are a passion with me. I'm afraid it would be quite impossible to remember all the people I purchase them from."

Sally, standing steadily by, restrained her indignation at this snub.

"She does remember," Miss Prince muttered wrathfully, "but won't admit it! I'm afraid she's made up her mind to hate my poor Janet beforehand."

"You must show me the miniature mother. How curious that you should have met Miss Ardenne before!" Cedric said hastily. "Was it some ancestor's picture that you sold?"

"Yes, I believe it was," she replied. "But I am not certain."

"At any rate, you bear a remarkable resemblance to the miniature," put in Sally.

TO DINE WITH THE KING

Sir Henry Pellatt and Others to Visit Balmoral—Regiment is Inspected by the Duke of Connaught.

Winchester, Sept. 9.—By Royal command Sir Henry Pellatt, Lieut-Col. Mason, two other officers and twelve non-commissioned officers and men of the Queen's Own Rifles will visit the King at Balmoral on Monday. The officers will dine with the King, and the men will be the guests of military men at Balmoral.

The Queen's Own was inspected on Wednesday afternoon in the camp at Avington Park, near Winchester.

In an address to the regiment, his Royal Highness congratulated officers and men on their smart appearance and evidences of efficiency, and read the message from the King relative to the visit to Valmoral.

The regiment marched fifteen miles today. Many of the men had sore feet at the end of the march, but none dropped out of the ranks.

macy.

Lady Alver cast a veiled glance of dile at the speaker, and moved toward the house.

"Perhaps you would like to go to your rooms?" she suggested. "We dine at 7.30."

Sally, in a state of suppressed resentment, dragged out her one evening-gown, a plain but well-cut black net, and took extraordinary pains with her hair.

"I wish we had not come," she muttered, surveying herself in the pier-glass. "No, I do not, for Janet's sake I can endure her ladyship's rudeness. Lord Alver is not the man to be influenced by anyone, once he's made up his mind; and I do not think that there is any doubt.
Come in! Oh, you are ready, Janet.
Let me look at you. What lovely roses!"

Lord Alver sent them to my room" Janet explained, touching the scented pink petals lovingly. "Shall I do?"

"Yes"—drily. "I don't think I can suggest any improvement." And, indeed, Janet looked most sweet and desirable in the soft, inexpensive white gown she wore, that had done duty as a best summer frock before it was cleaned and altered for evening wear.

"I'm glad," said the girl softly.
"I want to look nice, Sally dear."

"We both do," supplemented Sally briskly.

"Lady Alver is not very friendly," went on Janet, rather wistfully. "He is so nice, I thought that his mother—"

"Oh, I dare say it's only her way," Sally insisted cheerfully. "She will thaw, my child, when she knows us better. Don't bother about it; enjoy yourself and leave me to talk to her ladyship!"

When the daintily-served dinner was over, Cedric boldly claimed Janet as a companion for a walk.

"It is a glorious night. Come, we will go and have a look at the light-house on St. Catherine's Point!" he said masterfully; and Lady Alver watched them start in displeased silence, her sombre, dark eyes flashing ominously.

CHAPTER IV.

"If you please, m'lady—" The butler then hesitated; he knew the storm signals on his mistress's brow only too well, also the reason for them.
Janet was quite unconscious of the interest she excited in the well-trained domestic staff at the Cottage.

"What is it, Mold?" Lady Alver demanded impatiently.

"A gentleman to see you, m'lady, on important business," returned Mold, holding out the salver, on which lay a card.

She picked it up and read it.

Rather to Mold's surprise, Lady Al-ver bade him show the importunate visitor up to the boudoir where she sat. Her keen eyes swept over the lawyer's tall figure as he advanced.

"Mr.—er—Grabham, I believe?" she said. "You wish to see me?"

"I do"—gravely.

"Pray proceed."

I have a few shares of stock of the United Butchers' Supply Corporation, under the laws of Commonwealth of Massachusetts and doing a daily cash business. I believe this stock will pay dividends of more than 10 per cent. on every dollar you invest in it. The corporation owns and controls valuable patents. The reason it is placing this stock on the market is to increase the factory space and present capacity. The above is practically a monopoly with no competition.
In a very short while this stock should be worth a great deal more than its par value. It is now selling at 40 par.
This is not a risk. It is a sure thing. This business has existed four years and each day has brought a large increase in its present capacity. Full information and circular from EDWARD MORRISON, Attorney,
