A WAIF'S FORTUNES

His arm was round her, his face was near to hers as he bent over her, and she longed to rest in his embrace and sob out all her trouble there.

But not for her was that haven of love, and she tried to release herself as she faltered:

"I was not running away."
"What has made you change to me? Tell me," he demanded impudently. "Something has risen between us these last few days. I have felt it, yet cannot define it. You were so different when I first knew you."

He spoke as if that was quite a long time ago, as indeed it was to both of them, counting time by heartbeats.

"I can't think you fickle. Yet, Rosalie, you love you must know—how dearly I love you! Why do you treat me so?"

So sweet that avowal of love might have been to her! So sweet it was in the midst of the despair to read the despair in his eyes!

"Darling, answer me. Am I unreasonable? Is it that you have not understood? Rosalie, there has only been you, of all girls, since I saw you first. Only you shall ever be my wife."

"Oh, hush, hush! you must not say it," she cried.

"Why not?" His voice was suddenly hoarse and strange.

"I—I can never be your wife!" She felt as she said it like one doomed to torture her best beloved. She longed to give him joy, and she could only give him pain.

"I see. You don't care for me—like that," he said in tuneless tones. "That's what you wanted me to understand. It was stupid of me—to fancy you cared."

Not care, when her heart was breaking for love of him! The passionate denial almost rose to her lips.

Yet how could she confess her shame to him? How could she send him from her without a reason if once she confessed her love?

Better he should never know, she thought, almost recklessly in her misery. What could she bring him but sorrow? Better for him that he should think her cold or fickle.

"I could never be your wife," she repeated with pale lips. She could utter no conventional speeches. She forgot that he was rich and she a girl dependent upon her own earnings. The knowledge of the one great barrier between them dwarfed all else by contrast.

"Forgive me for bothering you," Wilfred said. "I—I misunderstood."

"Yes," she said vaguely.

"I thought you knew from the beginning and I hoped you cared a little," he said. "And then, when you changed so, I—I hadn't the sense to see—that you meant. Rosalie, is it quite hopeless?"

His face, his voice, that last appealing cry almost broke down her reserve.

Her tears came.
"Oh, yes, yes! You must believe me. I—I cannot," she said brokenly. Please leave me."

"I ought not to have vexed you," he replied huskily. "You're such a tender-hearted little thing. Good-bye, dear."

Good-bye! Good-bye! The word echoed in every sound of his footsteps to the heart of the girl who listened. Good-bye to hope, to love, to all that might have been!

Rosalie dragged herself back to the cottage, to be met by Kate, into whose arms she sank, weeping bitterly.

"I have seen Mr. Nugent, Kate," she said unsteadily, at last. "And we have said good-bye. I shall never see him any more most likely."

And Kate had only kisses and loving words for answer. That had come which she had feared from the beginning—sorrow and parting. If she was to know more, Rosalie would tell her. But Rosalie could not lay bare her heart-wound, even to the woman whose home she shared and who had been a true friend.

Wilfred left Moor Park next day, and soon after Rosalie and Kate quit the cottage to return to town.

Rosalie had work to do, but all the former interest was gone from it for her, and Robert Hardross saw the change in her, yet did not know the cause, for Kate held her peace.

Wilfred was at Merewood Hall when Rosalie sailed for America. Meta had been summoned home by the illness of her mother, and though Mrs. Annesley deeply regretted the cause of her absence, she was glad that she and Wilfred should be apart for a while.

In time Mrs. Annesley hoped all would be well. Rosalie and Wilfred would outlive the passion which had brought trouble to them both, and Meta and Wilfred would find happiness in one another.

But Wilfred had not been swayed by any passing fancy. His love for Rosalie had been deep and strong, though it had grown up so quickly. Meta could never inspire such a passion in him, or even be to him what Rosalie might have been.

Those fast-fleeting days of joy and the sorrow of loss had left their abiding influence upon him. He could not think of Rosalie as one who had really gone out of his life. Her image haunted him. Perhaps, who knows? the soul that love had linked to his was crying to him across all barriers of space.

Weeks, months passed by, but the memory of the one great love of his manhood remained fresh as if of yesterday. Meta was dear to him. He even loved her with the calm love he might have given to a sister; but, though she had heard nothing of Rosalie, Meta no longer hoped. Her love was a cross to bear in silence and unseen of all.

The autumn came and passed, and early in the spring Wilfred was in Rome.

It was the first time he had visited the Eternal City, but it could not interest him as it might once have done.

THE CATCH-MY-PAL IN IRELAND

The remarkable Catch-My-Pal movement initiated in Ireland during July of the past year continues to advance with the notable success which has attended it from the first and the activity and interest aroused in the temperance cause throughout the country is spreading to all branches of the work in other lands. The following notes at first hand from a writer on the field of activity at Belfast supply some further details to the press accounts already given out regarding the origin and success of this important total abstinence revolution:

"On the 13th of July last, the Rev. R. J. Patterson, LL.B., a Presbyterian minister of Armagh, was passing down one of the city streets when he saw six men standing under a street lamp. One of these men stepped up to Mr. Patterson and said: 'Your reverence, if you speak to those men you might get them to sign the pledge.' 'Well,' said Mr. Patterson, 'come and let us try.' Try he did, and after much strong persuasion induced the six men to promise to come together at his manse on the following Friday night and sign the total abstinence pledge.

"At the appointed hour the whole six men were on hand and took the pledge formulated by Mr. Patterson. After solemnizing the act by prayer, the latter then said: 'I want you six men to go out and stir up the whole of Armagh, and you can do it. Every man must be a missionary and catch his pal.' 'I think I can catch my pal,' said one of the men, as they started off on their mission, and that was the way the great movement and its name originated.

"On the following Monday night 31 men over 16 years of age presented themselves at the manse, and amid great enthusiasm signed the pledge. The next meeting demanded the use of a hall which was obtained, and over 60 new members joined. Thus the membership of the new union increased by leaps and bounds so that in a short time from the inauguration all Ulster was enthusiastic in the movement, which knows no petty distinctions of creed or politics. The clergy of all denominations are standing shoulder to shoulder in the campaign against the drink evil and new branches of the union are springing up in every parish throughout the North of Ireland. Branches for women are being formed with the same success, and branches for juveniles are to follow. There are now about 300 branches with a membership estimated at over 100,000, and this is daily increasing.

"The originator, the Rev. Mr. Patterson, has been appointed general secretary to promote the work of the unions and for this purpose he has been released from his pastoral duties. A sum of £10,000 has already been raised for the maintenance of the work which it is the purpose to extend with determined effort until all Ireland is sober and free from the dominion of alcoholic drink."

Let one can of grated pineapple with a cup of sugar cook 10 minutes; strain through a cloth, pressing out the juice; add 1 pint of ice water, 1 cup of sugar and 1 cup of lemon juice and freeze as usual. Serve when frozen to a mush (half frozen) in glasses. Decorate the top of each with a star of Whipped cream—To one cup of doubled cream well chilled, add 1 tea spoonful of vanilla extract and a rounding tablespoon of powdered sugar; beat with a whisk until solid. To shape the cream use a pastry bag with star tube attached.

HE TUCKED FISH UNDER ARM AND SWAM ASHORE

Lindsay, Aug. 10.—Talk about good fish stories, the following one, which is said to be true in every respect, is the best of the season.

One of the finest catches of the week was made by Mr. Arthur Rathmess, of Toronto, who is summering along with other Torontonians at Pleasant Point. It appears that Mr. Rathmess was out in a canoe alone and all at once he felt a strong jerk or nibble at the other end of his line, and he began to haul in his victim. In some manner the canoe suddenly capsized and Rathmess was precipitated into the waters of the Scugog. His companions on shore noticed the mishap and became anxious when Rathmess failed to make his appearance after several minutes. They were about to go to his rescue when they heard a joyous whoop a considerable distance away and on looking around they were delighted to see their friend walking out of the water to shore with a large maskinonge under his arm.

It appears that after being upset from his canoe Rathmess, who is an excellent swimmer—a regular "water dog"—kept winding up the fish line, and hauling his finny victim towards him. He reached the piscatorial monster, who was making extraordinary efforts to get away, and tucking it under his arm, he calmly walked out to terra firma.

An English Chemist Has Discovered How to Grow Hair

In England the ladies have entirely abandoned wearing rats, which is due entirely to this new discovery.

It has been proven that Henna leaves contain the ingredients that will positively grow hair. That they contain this long-looked-for article is proven every day.

The Americans are now placing on the market a preparation containing the extract from Henna leaves which is having a phenomenal sale.

This preparation is called SALVIA and is being sold with a guarantee to cure Dandruff and to grow hair in abundance. Being daintily perfumed SALVIA makes a most pleasant hair dressing. A. B. Ryan your druggist is the first to import this preparation into Fredericton and a large, generous bottle can be purchased for 50c.

KNIGHTS TEMPLARS' SESSION

Chicago, Aug. 11.—Chief interest in today's session of the thirty first triennial convocation of Knights Templars lay in the expected report of the committee appointed to recommend a time and place for the next grand encampment. This in spite of the fact that the election of officers was scheduled for today also. The election however, is usually perfunctory except for the lowest officer, for which there is contest, the other officers customarily being moved up. In the struggle for the next convocation, every knight of the thousands still in Chicago appears interested. New Orleans, Denver and San Francisco are the cities being given the most consideration by the committee.

BRITISH CAPITAL IN CANADA

London, Aug. 11.—The Scotsman asks whether a friendly sentiment has not induced British capitalists to advance money to Canada on easy terms. Even with such a brilliant future as that of Canada, it looks as if this is at last being recognized by the public. So far no injury has been done to Canadian credit by the question being asked whether it is time to adopt a more conservative attitude.
