THE DREAM COME TRUE

Jack Curtis tossed aside his pen with an impatient sigh, stretched his arms lazily, and leaned back precariously in his chair until his head and shoulders were out of the window. Then, disentangling his long legs from those of the little table upon whose ink-stained surface he had been at work since breakfast, he squirmed about until his arms were across the back of the chair and his chin on his arms.

Below him the side-street humanity came and went along the moist stone sidewalks. Under the window a huckster, from the seat of a strawberry-laden wagon, was bargaining volubly with Jack's landlady.

It was a fresh spring morning, and the very thought of week seemed suddenly intolerable. All the morning he had resolutely shut his ears to the enticing sounds of the outer world, and had pegged away at the story which was due at the office of The Despatch that evening. But now, with the sun-warmed breeze on his cheeks, his thoughts flew, in spite of himself, to green fields, shaded lanes, and rippling brooks, until a wild idea of letting the Sunday editor whistle for the promised story and of making his way off into the country away from brick blocks and endless cobblestones took possession of him.

By stretching his neck it was just possible to catch a glimpse of the corner of one of those tiny, green breathing spaces thrown with a niggardly hand about the city. It looked very cool and enticing. And there was all day for the story. And a moment later he had thrust his battered last year's straw-hat on his head and was clattering down-stairs.

The huckster had gone, and the landlady, proud in the possession of three scruffy-looking boxes of strawberries, still held possession of the doorway.

"Goin' out, Mr. Curtis?" she inquired affably. "Well, now, I'm sure it'll do you a world of good. I was thinking only this morning that you stayed indoors too much for the good of your health, sir; and such bee-ootiful weather, too!"

"Only to the park for a few moments, Mrs. Tucker. If the boy from The Despatch comes I wish you'd send him over there, please."

On reaching the little green square, Jack chose a seat as far as possible from the disturbing annoyances of chattering nurse-maids and romping children, and looked at his watch, bargaining with his conscience for just half an hour of idleness.

He was an orphan; more than that he was an orphan with, as far as he knew, not a living relation nearer than a few distant cousins whom he had never set eyes on. The necessity for self-support had come to him early in life, and now, at the age of twenty, he had reached a position of comparative affluence; that is, he suffered for none of the necessities of life, and was able to command a few of the luxuries.

But he had to work hard for them. He was wont to call himself a graduate of Newspaper Row, and by that he meant that he had served a four years' apprenticeship on various of the papers as reporter and had finally broken free from office routine to paddle his own canoe as a "freelance."

He prided himself that he had made something of a success in his unfettered vocation—yet not the success that he hoped some day to achieve. He found plenty of work to do, and a steady market for his "specials," but, so long as space-rates remained at from six to ten dollars a column, his deposits in the little near-by savings-bank were not likely to be monstrous.

With his rather disreputable hat thrust back on his head, his hands in his pockets, and his gaze fixed on his dilapidated shoes, his thoughts began to concern themselves with the injustice of fate. He wondered why that eccentric lady dispensed her favors with such blind partiality. There was Terry, like himself, on pace, who wrote the most nonsensical stories of slum-life, and who practically commanded his own prices. There was Owens, of The Despatch, who had shaken the dust of New York from his shoes a week ago and was on his way to some unheard-of place in the Argentine Republic to succeed to the estate of an obliging uncle who had died and left him all that he possessed. There was—But why go on?

Jack realized, with a sense of having been denied something which should have been his, that a rich uncle was not a thing to be despised. Why had he not had an uncle—one who would have grown fabulously rich and made him his heir?

He wondered whimsically if it would be possible to have a clause inserted in the Constitution guaranteeing to every free-born American a rich uncle?

The sound of footsteps crunching on the gravel caused him to glance up. A messenger boy was approaching with his glossy black book held open, and, even as Jack entertained rosy visions of telegraphic orders for unlimited stories at extra rates, the youth paused in front of him.

"Say, is your name Curtis?" he inquired uninterestedly.

Jack assured him it was, and took the yellow envelope with a sinking feeling in his heart. Possibly there was something due him, and a recollection of his financial resources at the moment did not reassure him as to the prospect of being able to take possession of it. His eyes sought the lower left hand corner, and he breathed freely again. "Charges Paid," he read.

ABSOLUTELY CURES
STOMACH TROUBLE
AND INDIGESTION

The question as to how long you are going to continue a sufferer from indigestion, Dyspepsia or out-of-order Stomach is merely a matter of how soon you begin taking some Diapiesin.

If your Stomach is lacking in digestive power, why not help the stomach to do its work, not with drastic drugs but a re-enforcement of digestive agents, such as are naturally at work in the stomach.

People with weak Stomachs should take a little Diapiesin occasionally, and there will be no more indigestion, no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach, no heartburn. Your risings, Gas on Stomach or Belching of undigested food, Headaches, Dizziness or Sick Stomach and besides, what you eat will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odors. All these symptoms resulting from a sour out-of-order stomach and dyspepsia are generally relieved in five minutes lieved in five minutes after taking a little Diapiesin.

Go to your druggist and get a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapiesin now, and you will always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and what you eat will taste good, because your stomach and intestines will be clean and fresh, and you will know there are not going to be any more bad nights and miserable days for you. They freshen you and make you feel that life is worth living—G.
