BOURASSA AND MONK
ATTACK SIR WILFRID

Nationalist Leader and Borden's Tory Lieutenant Express Their Views on the Government's Naval Question--Tory Quebec Legislator Had Seat on the Platform at Montreal Meeting.

(Montreal Witness)

Not since he was elected Premier of Canada in 1896 has Sir Wilfrid Laurier been so severely denounced as he was by Mr. Henri Bourassa at a Nationalist demonstration held in the skating rink at the corner of Ontario street and Delorimer avenue last night.

Mr. F. D. Monk, M. P., also spoke figuratively speaking he gave the audience double-granted chocolate-covered peanut to chew, one half being wrapped up in the following legend: 'If England and Germany came into conflict, Canada would not be in any way interested, except in the fact that if the present naval bill were put into force her ships and her men would have to participate.' The other half was hidden in the finely phrased declaration that: 'Britain's sovereigns had always held aloof from participation in party strife, and that the Governor-General of Canada, being a viceroys, should act in the same manner.'

Ald. Roux and Mr. J. Langlois presided over the meeting, and on the platform were Senator Landry and Messrs. Armand Lavergne, M. P. P., O. M. Tellier, leader of the provincial opposition; Bruno Nantel, M. P. for Terrebonne; Charles Chaput, and other leading Nationalists and Conservatives of the city and district. A crowd of Laval students and others who admire Mr. Bourassa's oratory more than his politics were present and there was no lack of cheering throughout the proceedings.

Mr. Bourassa said his purpose in speaking was to dissect the speech of the Premier at the Monument National, and to ascertain if really Sir Wilfrid Laurier was worthy of the position he occupied, thanks to the people of Quebec. He said he would not use the language of the Premier, yet he declared that right hon. gentleman had falsified public documents to make out his points. He traced back from Sir Wilfrid's first visit to England, and from the time the Premier had faced Mr. Chamberlain, then Secretary for the Colonies, adding that although he (Bourassa) had combatted the great English statesman, he admired his frank, persistent and straightforward advocacy of the imperial cause alongside of the men who turned somersaults on this side of the water.

Mr. Bourassa said that in opposing, as he did, from the start, Canada's participation in imperial defense, he was in such company as Mr. Asquith, Sir Charles Tupper and many other leading statesmen of this country and the old land. He told of the time just before the South African War when a gentleman named Allan had come to Canada as the emissary of Mr. Chamberlain, and carefully laid the plan for sending the first contingent when the war broke out. Rumors of armed conflict in South Africa were rife, and one day Mr. Tarte sent him a pressing message to come to Ottawa, and when he boarded the train he had as travelling companions Mr. Rodolphe Lemieux, M. P. for Gaspé, and Mr. Lomer Gouin, then M. P. for St. James. They talked the matter over on the way up, and Mr. Gouin said: 'If Laurier sends a soldier to South Africa I will denounce him before the whole country.' There were present at the Ottawa meeting Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. Belcourt and Mr. Champagne.

Mr. Bourassa explained a number of clauses in the Militia and Naval acts, and asserted that the words "for the defence of Canada" had disappeared from the naval bill. Sir Wilfrid had said that parliament would control the navy, and that parliament was the people. At the same time the Premier had declared that when Great Britain was at war Canada would also be at war, and the question would arise: Who should determine the action of the navy, the Imperial or the Canadian Parliament? If the Canadian Parliament had the control, that meant the Premier would decide the matter.

Speaking on the question of enforced service, Mr. Bourassa referred to the statements of Commander Roper in reference to the scarcity of men for the fleet, and also to the recent utterances of Lord Roseberry as to the approach of a conscription law in England, which necessarily would be extended over-seas later. The people of Canada, he declared, had shown that their relations with Great Britain had not changed, but they were not ready to accept a new policy such as this embodied in the naval law.

Mr. Monk referred to the "splendid effect of the fearless campaign that he and his friend, Mr. Bourassa, had carried on during the past few months. He said that he was proud of the stand they had taken for the rights of the province and Dominion. The constitution of the country was a sacred thing, and it was his pride to defend it on all occasions. Mr. Monk said he had sought in vain for a justification of the ministerial policy on the naval question in the Premier's speech at the Monument National. He repudiated the charge that the French-Canadians were afraid of war, as history mainly showed that on every occasion when the native land had been threatened there was no failure on the part of this section of the people to fly to the defence of their country and their homes. There was no doubt in the world, he said, that the meaning of the Naval bill was that while it was a Canadian navy in time of peace, it was nothing more or less than a unit of the Imperial fleet in time of war.

Mr. Monk, in conclusion, stated that, no doubt, following European complications, England and Germany would be engaged in war, and Canada's money, ships and sons would be made participants in a bloody war, in which particularly they had no interest. Mr. Monk then proceeded to extol the thoroughly impartial manner in which the monarchs of England throughout the Victorian and Edward's reign down to the present sovereign had held aloof from party strife in the old land, and he contended that if the Governor-General was a viceroys, that His Excellency should in no way mix himself up in burning questions of politics.

RAILWAYS MUST PROTECT FORESTS

Legislation Requiring This Will be Introduced--Destructive Agency--Hon. Clifford Sifton Tell of Need of Conservation.

Toronto, Oct. 22--Hon. Clifford Sifton, Chairman of the Commission on Conservation, addressing the Empire Club at the St. Charles Cafe yesterday, said the commission was to introduce legislation at the next session of the Dominion Parliament to require railway companies to maintain efficient fire protection all along their lines. When the legislation was secured, he said, they would ask the Provincial Governments to appoint special inspectors to see the law is carried out.

Mr. Sifton considered the railway locomotive the most serious agent in forest devastation. He told of the rapid disappearance of the forests in the United States, and computed that in twenty years, at the present rate, the forests there would be almost exhausted. If they then came to Canada, he said, and used up the forests of this country at the same rate, the Canadian forests would come to an end in about seven years.

OPPOSING WATERPOWER MONOPOLIES

Referring to waterpower, Mr. Sifton said: "There was a perfect epidemic of waterpower legislation at the last session much of it objectionable." He told of the efforts made to stem the tide, not successfully, referring especially to the proposition to dam the St. Lawrence with the special object of transferring power to the American side of the river. The views of the commission were largely adopted in this. "I do not know that the scheme is dead, but I think that vigilance on the part of such public bodies as this, the press, and the public generally may avert the danger. We should not permit the monopoly of water power and any immediate exigencies should not be permitted to interfere with the general principle."

WASTE IN THE UNITED STATES.

In beginning his address Mr. Sifton referred to the experience of the United States during its last forty years of almost unexampled progress in commercial prosperity and showed how its reckless disregard of conservation principles had brought it face to face with a serious problem. The farming methods had been waste

THE HAT PIN HAS BECOME A MENACE TO MANKIND

(Montreal Witness)

Mr. Thomas M. Scott, of James Scott & Company, has a long red scratch on his nose. When asked if he played with the cat he replies that he didn't. A certain traveller for Mussons Ltd., has a long nasty scar down his cheek. When his friends meekly advise him to buy a safety razor he becomes slightly peevish.

If this little article were addressed to the ladies we would in the beginning advise that it is not to be taken as a threat, but as a warning. Down in men's hearts there is chivalry, but what chance has it in these days of suffragettes and hobble skirts? The recent attacks made have stirred up resentment, and a feeling that has become general that steps for protection must be taken: The hat-pin has become a menace, for years a weapon of defence, it has become offensive.

Fashion must be blamed for the change. Fashion constantly changes. The merry widow with the wide brim is gone. From one extreme we pass to the other. The hats of today have no brim, they are brimless. The protection afforded by the wide sombre-like circular projection is gone. In the past the point of the hat-pin lay within the dead-line of the brim. Now the dead-line is removed and the point projects to all the world, at every angle like the twelve inch guns of a 'Dreadnought.'

A movement against the mutilation of the male face has been begun. It was a small beginning, 'tis true, and yet mighty evils have been abolished through the efforts of a few who gathered together and began a campaign. The meeting was impromptu but only because the opportunity came without warning, as opportunities have a habit of arriving.

ful and unscientific, the fisheries had been seriously depleted, the disappearance of the forests at the present rate seemed only a matter of a few decades, and in various ways many districts formerly rich had become totally unproductive. The vast resources still remaining to them by reason of unsatisfactory laws were practically monopolized by large financial interests, so that the people cannot participate in them on moderate and reasonable terms. Hon. Mr. Sifton warned them that capitalists from the south would be trying to get hold of as much of the great natural resources of Canada as possible and that the situation there fore called for uncommon care and vigilance.

Mr. J. Sastell Hopkins, Chairman tendered the thanks of the club to the speaker.
