A HOLIDAY ROMANCE

BY MRS. WELLESLEY-SMITH

"A good thing, too!" Sally cried, with a vicious glance at the unfortunate machine. "I've always told Janet that she'd come to grief; she is a most reckless rider. I believe she goes to sleep on the machine. At any rate, her thoughts are always in the clouds instead of on her brakes. Will you come in, Lord Alver?"
"No, thanks but if you will allow me, I will call tomorrow and make sure that you are none the worse—" looking at Janet.

Thanks to Sally's common-sense treatment, Janet was quite herself the following morning, save for a certain stiffness in arm and shoulder, which were adorned by several bad bruises.

"I wonder if Lord Alver will call," she said.

"Of course, it would only be polite," answered Sally. "Now, Janet, this chair is most comfortable, and here is an interesting book: 'You must take things easily today.'"

"Mayn't I go out?"—with a longing glance at the sea sparkling in the sun.

"Presently, for a little walk. Oh, here he is!"—as a motor glided noiselessly up to the door. "With some lovely flowers, too!"—in a stage-whisper.

Lord Alver's entrance prevented any reply; he presented both Sally and Janet with the roses he carried. "I am so glad to find you are apparently none the worse for your fall," he said. "Let me take you both for a ride in the car. I am sure it would do you good, Miss Arderne!"—eagerly.

"That would be just the thing for Janet," Sally agreed readily. "Thank you, we shall be delighted to accept your kind invitation!"

Mr. Samuel Grabham, approaching, with the intention of calling on Janet was electrified to see her being assisted into the waiting car by Lord Alver, whom he knew well by sight. He started as though unable to believe the evidence of his own eyes, and remained as motionless as a statue, gazing after the merry party till they had vanished in the distance.

CHAPTER III.

"My dear Cedric, you must be crazy!" ejaculated Lady Alver, looking up from her letters and gazing in surprise at her son.

"Not a bit of it, mother! Surely my dearest is nothing extraordinary!" the young man returned, with exasperating coolness.

"Nothing extraordinary," echoed his outraged mother, raising her voice, "to calmly request me to invite a couple of common girls to stay here?"—with a glance round the pretty morning room of The Cottage, part of Lord Alver's extensive property. The house occupied a sheltered position between Ventnor and Niton, and Lady Alver was wont to spend the greater part of the summer in this peaceful retreat.

"Pardon me, mother, they are not common girls. You misunderstood me. They are both charming! and as much ladies as you are."

Her ladyship sniffed.
"Who are they? Mere nobodies, with no social position whatever!" Lord Alver laid aside his paper. His handsome young face was rather pale.

"Mother, I may as well tell you that I intend to ask Janet Arderne to marry me if she will have me!"—modestly.

"What name did you say?" interrupted Lady Alver hoarsely.

"Janet Arderne! Mother, are you ill?"—in alarm.

"No, no; nothing of the sort; I am only grieved to realize that my wishes have no weight with you. Since you insist, you force me to comply with your absurd and quixotic idea—I will ask this Miss Arderne and her friend her. But I will never give my consent to your marrying her!"—with an outburst of passion that startled him.

"I am very sorry to grieve you," he answered quietly, "but, with or without your consent, Janet and no other girl shall be my wife! I am sure, when you see her, mother, you will love her. She is so pretty and natural, so—"

"Oh, for mercy's sake, spare me a list of her perfections!" her ladyship ejaculated. "What is the girl's address?"

He hesitated.
"You will write a nice letter—a letter that will make her accept?"

"As you please."
She swept across the room, and sat down before the writing-table to hastily scribble the desired note.

Cedric took it, with a smile, and all the way to Southsea, as his dainty steam yacht rushed ahead, was picturing to himself Janet's surprise and pleasure when she read it. Lady Alver, left alone, mechanically took up a book and her parasol, and sought a favorite and secluded spot in the well-kept garden, from which a good view of the sea could be obtained.

But the volume lay neglected on the grass, and her ladyship, with a frown on her well-preserved face, sat motionless, her thoughts by no means pleasant ones.

"Just when I began to consider everything safe—after all these years—it is hard—hard," she said aloud. "I am the most unfortunate of women. The world is full of girls—many of them pretty and attractive. Why must Fate fling Janet Arderne across my son's path?"

"I am very sorry, if you are disappointed, Mr. Grabham," Janet said, gently but firmly. "You have taken me entirely by surprise! We are practically strangers, and I had not the slightest idea—"

"That I love you—adore you—desire nothing in the world so much as to call you wife!" returned the lawyer ardently.

"I know I could make you happy!" he went on. "You should have everything in the world you wanted—"

"Mr. Grabham, please say no more! I do not love or even like you," the girl said frankly.

"The love would come. I could teach you—"

THE HUDSON BAY RAILWAY STARTED

Hon. Mr. Graham Turns First Sod in Saskatchewan

Pas Mission, Kewatin, Sept. 7.—The first sod in the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway was turned here yesterday by Hon. Geo. Graham on the south shore of the River Saskatchewan near the approach to the bridge, now under contract of construction.

The minister of railways in a brief address, outlined the project of opening up the new country and furnishing a water route to Liverpool. The Saskatchewan government was represented by Hon. A. P. McNab.

The minister and the government engineer, John Armstrong, went over a portion of the projected route through the spruce country. No official decision was reached but it is probably that Fort Nelson will be the terminal point of the new railway.

The construction of the bridge under way is in charge of R. W. Graham who, during the summer has built four miles of bridges on 600 miles of track for the Canadian Northern. Chief Antoine Constante of the Pasqua Indian tribe, addressed a gathering in tribute to the work of the minister of railways.

The two most exciting periods in a woman's life are when she is listening to her first proposal and bidding for a basket of broken crockery at an auction.

"Don't you wish you had Alladin's wonderful lamp?" said the imaginative boy. "No" replied the practical youth. "I'd rather be sole proprietor of a city full of gas meters."

G. T. P. TO BUILD PALATIAL HOTEL

Victoria, Sept. 7.—The Grand Trunk Pacific has just closed a deal for nearly three acres adjacent to Parliament Square as a site for a palatial hotel. The price paid was in the neighborhood of $300,000. Owners of buildings on the site have until Christmas to vacate the premises.

Mr. Mackenzie of the Canadian Northern, is here conferring with Premier McBride regarding the Vancouver Island line. He announces that the expenditure of more than $3,000,000 in opening up the Dunsmuir coal mines, recently acquired by himself and associates, will be made.

Sir Walter Scott and Daniel O'Connell, at a late period of their lives ascribed their success in the world principally to their wives. Were the truth known theirs is the history of thousands.

It has been estimated that two Tichborne trials cost something near a quarter of a million sterling. To the Tichborne estates the expense was £20,000.
