A WAIF'S FORTUNES

She was very pale in her black frock but the color rushed to her face as she met Hardross. It was he who had asked Santry why Delarieux did not marry her, she remembered.

Yet there was only kindness in his look, and she divined his wish to express his sympathy and his difficulty in doing so.

"Thank you so much for coming," she said simply.

"You are going away soon, they tell me."

"Yes, I am going to live with a lady who is a relative of Mrs. Delarieux's."

"I am glad you have found such a kind friend as Mrs. Annesley."

So they spoke, Hardross carefully avoiding any references that could agitate her. It was strange yet sweet to see her in this peaceful home in a good woman's care.

He held the little hand she gave him, in frank friendliness; and he only said, "Good-bye;" but there was a prayer in his heart:

"Heaven guard you and keep you from evil, dear, and give you peace and happiness!"

She would be shielded henceforth, he trusted, from what Mrs. Annesley had told him. And so he went on his way knowing that he was scarcely more than a stranger to her, yet longing to be her friend.

CHAPTER VI.

The preacher prayed that she might be forgiven, But told her to look for mercy—in Heaven.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

The days slipped by at the vicarage, and Rosalie recovered her usual health in spite of her mental suffering. It would be better for her, Mrs. Annesley thought, when she had left the place where Delarieux was buried, and was no longer almost within sight of the house where she had lived with him.

Mrs. Delarieux expressed her satisfaction at Rosalie's demeanor, being too obtuse to understand that the girl's spirit was crushed by her bereavement so that the change in her circumstances was disregarded as yet.

She submitted meekly to the arrangements made on her behalf. The mourning provided for her was of the plainest and ugliest description, and many things, which had actually been her lover's gifts to her, were left behind at the villa. She possessed a few valuable jewels, and even these she gave up to Mrs. Delarieux, that lady suggesting that she ought not to keep them, but allowed them to be sold and the money invested to assist in maintaining her.

Rosalie only kept two rings, a simple half-hoop of pearls, which was the first present of the kind Delarieux had ever given her, and a cluster of sapphires and brilliants, which, after some difficulty, she prevailed upon Mrs. Annesley to accept as a "keepsake."

It was very hard to leave the vicarage and her friends behind her and go away to the new, untried life. She knew nothing of what awaited her, only that her future home was to be with a Miss Pennington, who was elderly and who lived in the North of London.

She travelled alone, and she was met at the railway station by a middle-aged woman, very disagreeable in face and manner, who Rosalie was soon to learn was an old and confidential servant of Miss Pennington's, named Deacon.

The girl's heart sank, for in this woman's manner there was that same aloofness that had been so keenly felt by her in the demeanor of Mrs. Delarieux.

They drove to an old-fashioned, ugly ous of moderate size, and Rosalie was conducted to an ugly sitting-room, where Miss Pennington awaited her.

"This is the young woman, ma'am," said Mrs. Deacon.

Miss Pennington looked at Rosalie, and Rosalie looked at her. The girl's eyes were unconsciously appealing, the woman's stern.

A hard-featured face, with thin, cruel lips and a narrow forehead, and eyes set near together, a lean, angular figure, in an iron-gray dress, skimp as to the skirt, and with a bodice tight and guileless of trimming, so that the angles of the unlovely form were accentuated.

"I hope you appreciate the goodness of the dear Christian lady who has sent you here, Rose," said Miss Pennington. "She has not turned from you, she has not condemned you, but she has stretched out, the hand of mercy to raise you from the depths of sin and to save you from everlasting wrath."

Rosalie stood pale and dismayed. While Miss Pennington held forth she appeared to be looking through the beyond her auditor, a peculiarity often to be noticed in women who are accustomed to harangue before large assemblies.

The love of beauty was implanted deep in Rosalie's soul. Her childhood with its squalid surroundings, was as some nightmare dream to recall. Her real life seemed to her to have begun when she had returned to consciousness after her illness at the villa. Delarieux had cultivated her taste and developed all that had been latent in her of the artist and poet, and hence it was that even Miss Pennington's surroundings chilled and depressed her.

The cold-looking room, with its cumbersome horse-hair covered furniture, the hideous engravings of scriptural subjects upon the walls, the drab colorings, all seemed to say:

"Here is your prison, here, without love and without hope, you must pass your days."

And the woman herself, narrow of mind and cold of heart, repelled Rosalie.

TEMPERANCE ESSENTIAL TO SUCCESS IN ATHLETICS

Some striking testimony on the value of temperance in athletic competitions has recently been furnished by an able writer in a series of articles contributed to the organ of the Band of Hope Unions in Great Britain. One of the most interesting of these cities both ancient and modern examples to show the relationship of drinking to athletic ability and proves the essential value of total abstinence in achieving the highest degree of success. Dealing with training among the ancients, the writer states:

"In all past ages and amongst all peoples athletic sports have been the delight of youth and manhood. The Greeks and Romans had an intense admiration for bodily strength and skill and endurance was in these times rightly admired.

"Ancient testimony agrees with that of modern times that muscular strength and endurance is best secured without the use of strong drink. Epictetus, who lived eighteen hundred years ago, said: 'Do you wish to win a prize in the Olympic games? Consider the requisite preparations, and the consequences. You must observe a strict regimen, live on food which you dislike, and abstain from all delicacies; you must exercise yourself at the necessary and prescribed times, both on heat and an cold; and you must not drink wine.'

Ladies of Culture and Refinement Use Salvia Hair Tonic. It Makes the Hair Beautiful.

At last a remedy has been discovered that will positively destroy this pest.

That Dandruff is caused by germs is accepted by every sensible person. Dandruff is the root of all hair evils.

SALVIA will kill the dandruff germs and remove Dandruff in ten days, or money back.

A. J. Ryan guarantees it. It will grow hair, stop itching scalp, falling hair, and make the hair thick and abundant. It prevents hair from becoming the favorite with women of taste and culture, who know the social value of beautiful hair. A large, generous bottle costs only 50c., at leading druggists, everywhere, and in Fredericton by A. J. Ryan. The word "SALVIA" (Latin for sage) is on every bottle.

For years the Pittsburg papers have been telling what a wonder Honus Wagner was—and they did not overstate it but when he suffers a batting slump they accuse the honest German of "laying down." With some people a baseball player is an idol today and a mutt tomorrow.

Myron Grimshaw once on the Boston American team, but now with Toronto, was hit in the head a few days ago with a pitched ball. An eardrum was ruptured, but is healing and the big slugger will soon be back in the game again.

The Teacher (reading)—"Then the girl warrior faced the mocking foe and unsheathed her deadly weapon." What does that mean, children? Well, Elsie? Elsie—Please, ma'am, I think it means she stuck out her tongue.—Tit-Bits.

LADIES' NINE-GORED SKIRT. Paris Pattern No. 2783

All Seams Allowed.

This simple and practical model for the walking skirt of serge, tweed, cheviot, mohair, linen, khaki or Venetian cloth is cut in narrow gores, shaped into the waist line at the upper edge, giving the fashionable slim appearance to the figure. A unique feature is the added fullness at the lower edge of the front, which is supplied by the inverted box-plait at either side of the side-front seams, a similar inverted plait at the center-back supplying the fullness at this point also. If desired, this skirt may be trimmed with narrow braid along the edges of each seam, finishing in a fancy design just below the knees. In fact, it will be noticed that most of the trimming this season runs lengthwise, which adds height to the figure, and which is always graceful if properly applied. For the coming summer skirts of Victoria lawn are to be much worn with the separate waist of batiste or nainsook, and this model is an excellent one for skirts of this material. The pattern is in eight sizes—22 to 36 inches waist measure. For 26 waist the skirt, made of material with nap, requires 9 yards 20 inches wide, 4½ yards 36 inches wide, 4½ yards 42 inches wide or 3½ yards 54 inches wide; without nap it needs 8½ yards 20 inches wide, 4½ yards 36 inches wide, 4½ yards 42 inches wide or 3½ yards 54 inches wide; width of lower edge, about 4 yards.

Price of pattern, 10 cents.

LEADER OF TEMPERANCE IN THE ARMY

United States Secretary of War Dickinson has recently followed the example of General Frederick Dent Grant, in publicly declaring himself on the side of total abstinence. He writes: "I believe in everything that encourages voluntary abstinence both within and without the army. The man who abstains is better qualified to be a useful and law-abiding citizen and to promote his own happiness and that of his family and friends. One of the greatest burdens upon our country is that of crime which is the direct result of drink. When the Romans achieved their greatest success they were water drinkers."

An odd custom prevails in India. A native visitor never takes his departure of his own accord. Etiquette requires the host to dismiss him, which he does in a polite way, not saying "Go," but by saying hospitably, "Pray come again; the sooner we see your face the better we shall be pleased."
