PETER FARRELL & CO.

LONDON INTERESTED IN TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS

Causing More Talk Than Canada's Naval Plans in the Great Metropolis.

London, March 29—Premier Asquith continuing his address in support of the Government's veto resolution today, said that he did not favor a referendum as a means of settling the deadlock of the two Houses. He would like a joint session provided both chambers had a democratic basis, but he did not think that a joint session was applicable to Great Britain's existing constitution. Therefore the only means for overcoming the present difficulties was the limitation of the veto of the Lords, coupled with a shortening of the duration of parliaments, which, he thought, would insure that the popular will would not be frustrated. The royal veto was dead as Queen Anne, he added, and the absolute veto of the Lords must follow before the road could be cleared for advent of a full grown and unfettered democracy.

A. J. Balfour, the leader of the Opposition, followed the Prime Minister, whose proposal he characterized as "the most absurd experiment in constitution making upon which any government ever embarked."

It would be madness, he said, to adopt the changes which would remove all safeguards from the affairs of finance. He could not conceive a more inauspicious moment for the suggestion that the Lords had exceeded their powers in rejecting the money bill than now when everybody knew that if the House of Commons voted on the merits of the budget without regard to ulterior issues like home rule, the financial measure would be rejected. Mr. Balfour contended that the existence of the House of Lords were more necessary than ever now when "modern radicalism has revolutionary ideals and aims upon which the people should be consulted before their final adoption."

Mr. Balfour intimated that if this "really grotesque proposal" ever became a law the Conservatives would promptly remove it from the statute books when they returned to power.

John E. Redmond leader of the Nationalists, congratulated Mr. Asquith upon the substance of his resolutions which he said would be supported heartily by himself and his friends. He was glad that all reference to a reform of the House of Lords had been dropped, for if the Government had proposed any plan of reform the Nationalists could not have supported it.
