THE DREAM COME TRUE

The latter had remained unusually quiet and serious during the remainder of the trip; but Mr. Bowen, with the prospect before him of transferring a valueless hole in the ground for the sum of one hundred and thirty thousand dollars, had been too busy with his own thoughts to observe any difference in his nephew's demeanor. Nor had he suspected this difference when, at the wharf, he had shaken Jack's hand cheerily and parted with an affectionate admonition to the boy to be sure and call for him at the hotel on Tuesday morning.

Jack had promised. And now he wished he hadn't. Somehow, he couldn't appreciate what his uncle termed "the beauty of it." In plain English, it was a dishonest transaction from start to finish. Possibly, he thought, his newly discovered uncle was no worse than hundreds of others, but this idea failed to comfort him. He had welcomed his only relation, metaphorically, with wide open arms. And now to have him turn out a "mining shark" was too much for Jack's peace of mind. He couldn't help feeling that his uncle had cheated him just as he had cheated the investors, and the disillusionment made him heavy at heart.

But when he had reacted the comfortable, rambling, gray-shingled old house, had washed and dressed and found himself seated again at the table with his friends, it all seemed so enjoyable to him that his spirits rose, and for the time he put away all thought of his disappointing uncle.

The Cresswell family consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Cresswell, their daughter, a girl of eighteen, and a son three years younger. Mr. Cresswell was expected after dinner. It was almost like getting home, he thought contentedly.

From his seat at the left of the shining coffee-machine he could see the new moon sailing in the twilight sky and could feel the ocean breeze playing about his forehead as he answered the kindly questions of his friends. Later, when the light was fading from the sky and the frogs began piping in the marshland back of the beach, Jack and Margaret walked to the landing to meet Mr. Cresswell. The breeze had fulfilled its earlier promise and was now blowing strong, cool and salty from the open ocean. Mingled with it were the fragrance of the clover and the damp odor of the seaweed on the beach. The slender moon waxed in radiance, and the incoming steamer churned up a long path of dissolving light in its wake.

Jack was glad of Mr. Cresswell's presence during the homeward walk. He somehow feared to be alone with Margaret and the walk to the landing had vastly increased that fear. For two years and more she had been to him a dream of the "might have been." If only, he pondered time and again, he were rich. Not that wealth itself attracted him unduly, but with wealth, he thought, the dream might become reality. He sighed dismally as he realized the magnitude of that "if," and stole a glance at the girl.

She was chatting laughingly with her father and swung her broad straw hat as she walked. She wore a plain white gown with a bunch of daisies thrust carelessly into her belt. The moon cast a wan halo about her breeze-tossed brown hair, and Jack fancied he could see the sparkling reflection of the moonlit sea in her eyes when she turned towards him.

When his door had closed behind him that night he took a very crumpled and much withered daisy, from his pocket, pressed it reverently to his lips, and stowed it carefully away in his pocketbook.

The next afternoon, while they sat alone on the porch, Jack told Mr. Cresswell of the advent of his uncle. "And now I suppose," said Mr. Cresswell, when Jack had finished, "that we'll lose you. Your uncle will naturally want to take you back with him. Do you know, my boy, I am rather inclined to regret the acquiring of this unsuspected relative? I can't help thinking that you've discovered your work in life already, Jack. I believe you are on your way to make a name for yourself. I've read lots of your stuff, and there's just that quality of optimism and self-belief in it that promises well in a youngster. I wish I could make you see your opportunity as I see it. You're young and you've got the world before you; you've had small successes already; it's hard work sometimes, I know, but it's life, Jack. It's the real thing. What you're doing you're doing yourself, without any one's help. And some day—perhaps tomorrow, perhaps next year—you'll make your hit. Come, Jack, throw the uncle over; that is, figuratively, and stay here and peg away. If you want help, you know where to come for it. Think it over."

Sunday evening brought a brisk wind from the sea, and after supper they sought the landward side of the verandah. It had clouded up just before sunset, and the air held promise of rain on the morrow. Margaret was a blur of white in the growing darkness. Mrs. Cresswell had been silent for so long that Jack suspected her of being asleep, until a sudden turn in the desultory conversation proved him wrong.

"Say, dad, don't forget that you have promised to take me out West when you go to look at the mine," said Will.

"Did I promise that?" asked his father in simulated surprise.

"We shall all be millionaires by winter," explained Mrs. Cresswell somewhat plaintively. "Mr. Cresswell has joined a company to purchase a gold mine out in—Colorado, isn't it, dear?"

A WOMAN'S BACK.

Not One Woman In Twenty Has a Strong Back.

The kidneys are to blame nine times out of ten.

When the blood isn't properly filtered the poisons that ought to be carried off by the kidneys are sent back through the system and it's hardly to be wondered that back-aches and lame backs come to make life miserable.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles. They begin by expelling all the poisonous matter from the kidneys, and then heal the delicate membranes and make their action regular and natural.

Mrs. A. H. Hutton, Jr., McCreary, Mo., writes:—"Two years ago last spring I had a very severe pain in the small of my back. When I would rise it seemed as if my back would break. My kidneys were very badly out of order, and I would have to get up three or four times during the night. I took one box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they effected a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify Doan's.

MR. BOURASSA AND THE NAVY

(Special despatch to the "Canada from Quebec, dated Nov. 30.)

Some ten ardent Nationalists met last evening to discuss the question of Mr. Bourassa's declarations with regard to the navy.

All were firmly convinced that the Nationalist leader had never made a declaration in favor of the navy.

A young barrister of this city was admitted to the meeting, and to the great amazement of all, said to them: "In 1902, at the Conference of London, Laurier said, 'Today the expenditure which Canada makes for the defence of the country is restricted to the land army; the Canadian government is disposed to make expenditure with a view to the organization of a navy.'"

These words were quoted in the House in 1903, and Mr. Bourassa exclaimed: "The result of the conference is most gratifying and the ministers of Canada have taken their true position."

"Further," continued the young Liberal barrister, "on the 11th of February, 1910, Mr. Bourassa wrote over his own signature in the 'Devoir': 'If it had been a question of a Canadian fleet for the defence of Canada under the authority of the Canadian Government, I should have found nothing to be gainsaid in article 17, nor in article 19, nor in the law as a whole.'"

"What do you think of that?" said the young barrister to the honest Nationalists.

The surprise was universal. "Finally," continued the young Liberal, "did you read in the 'Devoir' of the 15th of February, 1910, under the same signature of Mr. Henri Bourassa the following words:

"It is a lie that the Nationalists desire that Canada should hold aloof from all the Empire's wars, and Laurier is perfectly aware of the fact."

At this moment the ten astounded Nationalists seized their hats and went off to tell their wives of this scandal.
