Give your servants GOLD DUST to clean with, treat them rightly and you will have few occasions to insert a "help wanted" ad

They say a good workman is known by his tools. You cannot expect your maid to keep everything ship-shape unless you give her every modern help. To keep house without GOLD DUST is to do work by hard, old-fashioned methods. For cleaning everything and anything about the house—from cellar to attic—GOLD DUST is worth its weight in gold. It cuts grease and dirt like magic, does away with scouring and scrubbing, and saves time and tempers.

Your servant can do more and better work and keep sweet with the aid of GOLD DUST in all household cleaning.

GRAND ART GALLERY

AT ST. JOHN FAIR

Vigorous Committee Co-operating with Art Clubs all Over

WONDERFUL ENLARGEMENTS,
NEW STRUCTURES AND RE-ARRANGEMENTS

The few remaining weeks between today and the opening of the great Dominion Exhibition in St. John, N. B., will be filled with the finishing details of making what will unquestionably be the ablest effort of eastern Canada in the exposition line. Already the familiar aspect of the Exhibition grounds is so greatly changed that regular visitors to the St. John fall fairs will stand amazed upon entering the improved show-plant. In front of the main buildings the ticket offices have been deeply recessed off the street to allow carriage-ways and prevent congestion of traffic; inside the main buildings the principal entrance has been widened, a new music gallery has been erected over the concert platform; Machinery Hall has had its capacity almost doubled; the new building which adjoins the parent structures will lend an entirely new appearance to the show, and with the Horticultural and Agricultural displays in the military drill shed, the transportation exhibits in the spacious quarters of the old Agricultural Hall; Poultry Show back of the 208 foot grandstand, etc., the Dominion Fair will present the St. John grounds in an almost new light.

THE TERRIBLE RAVAGES OF THE SLEEPING SICKNESS IN UGANDA

We passed by many islands, green with meadow and forest, beautiful in the bright sunshine, but empty with the emptiness of death. A decade previously these islands were thronged with tribes of fisher folk; their villages studded the shores, and their long canoes planked together with fibre, furrowed the surface of the lake. Then, from out of the depths of the Congo forest came the dreadful scourge of the sleeping sickness and smote the doomed people who dwelt beside the Victorian Nile, and on the coasts of the Nyanza Lakes and in the lands between. Its cause was a biting fly, brother to the tsetse whose bite is fatal, beside lakes and rivers; and wherever it dwells after the sleeping sickness came it was found that man could not live. In this country, between, and along the shores of the great lakes, two hundred thousand people died in slow torment, before the hard-taxed wisdom and skill of medical science and governmental administration could work and betterment whatever in the situation. Men still die by thousands, and the disease is slowly spreading into fresh districts. But it has proved possible to keep it within limits in the regions already affected; yet only by absolutely abandoning certain districts, and by clearing all the forest and brush in tracts which serve as barriers to the fly and which permit passage through the infected belts. On the western shores of Victoria Nyanza, and in the islands adjacent thereto, the ravages of the pestilence were such, the mortality it caused was so appalling, that the government was finally forced to deport all the survivors inland to forbid all residence beside or fishing in the lake, and with this end in view to destroy the villages and the fishing fleets of the people. The teeming lake fish were formerly a main source of food supply to all who dwelt near by; but this has now been cut off, and the myriads of fish are left to themselves to the host of water birds, and to the monstrous man-eating crocodiles of the lake, on whose blood the fly also feeds and whence it is supposed by some that it draws the germs so deadly to human kind.

BRITISH PREMIER RIDICULES THE GERMAN "SCARE" AS ABSURD

The Government Naval Programme is Being Carried Out in the interests of the Empire and in no Sense as a Mark of Hostility to Germany.

(Halifax Chronicle)

Not the least important feature of the recent speech of the Prime Minister of England on the naval situation was its pacific tone in the references to Germany's naval armament. This was important as showing that there was no longer basis for the absurd "scare" of last year and as promising a strengthening of the friendly relations which obtain between the two kindred nations. Mr. Asquith declared that there was absolutely no ground for associating Britain's naval expenditures with hostility to Germany or mistrust of that country's intentions. Nothing, he said, could be farther from the truth, and that such an idea should find credence was to be regretted in the interests of international amity and confidence.

Mr. Asquith emphasized that Great Britain's relations with Germany had been and still were of the most cordial character, and he looked forward to increasing warmth and fervor and intimacy in those relations year by year. He welcomed all the various agencies and movements by which the two peoples were getting more and more to understand each other, and he refused to believe that the German Government would in the least inordinate the view which has been imputed to the German nation, that Britain's naval preparations were directed against them any more than the German naval preparations were directed against Great Britain. Germany has her own policy to pursue, her own interests to safeguard. She is a great world power; she has outlying dependencies; she is constantly sending her sons and daughters to the uttermost parts of the earth, and her trade is increasing everywhere. The German statesmen and people honestly and legitimately believe they can not maintain their position as a great world power, with the numerous and constantly increasing interests they are bound to defend in every quarter of the globe, unless they increase their navy.

On the other hand, the position of the British government is that it is responsible not so much in looking after an increasing and newly-developing Empire as it is responsible for the defence and security of an Empire which already exists. "We should be false," said the Prime Minister, "to the trust which the nation and Empire have reposed in this House and in the government of the day, unless we maintained that ample margin of security against all probable or even possible risks, which is the only insurance a nation such as ours can pursue—an insular country with forty millions of people dependent on foreign supplies of food and raw material, and responsible for the protection and defence of dependencies and dominions in every quarter of the globe."

Mr. Asquith added that it would be exactly the same thing if this increase of naval development, which has taken place during the last few years in Germany, had occurred in France, between which country and Britain "most intimate ties of friendship and even affection exist." What the British Government must do, if it is to discharge the trust reposed in it, is to look at the shipbuilding programmes of the world, taken into account the possible risks, and never sacrifice that margin of safety by which alone the security of the Empire and its trade can be assured. It was in no sense from hostility to Germany that the British government has had to look at German shipbuilding as being to some extent, to a very large extent of late years, the governing factor in the problem of the margin which has to be secured.

Mr. Asquith's pacificatory sentiments have met with a friendly response in Germany where the leading newspapers have hailed the Premier's speech as showing that the tension between Great Britain and Germany has been relaxed to a very considerable degree and that there exists between the two nations "a justifiable rivalry but no longer unjustifiable mistrust." The Premier's assurance that "the British government would welcome an Anglo-German agreement in regard to naval matters with joy," evokes from the Berliner Tageblatt the response that "the joy would be shared by an overwhelming majority of the German people." The burden of naval armament is becoming so huge that it may well be that the people will compel the government to call a halt. But in any event, the German shipbuilding programme will be reduced by one-half in 1913, when British statesmen may find the time opportune for framing an understanding which will remove all cause of friction and put an end to the mad competition in armaments.

There is new life throbbing everywhere in Ireland. The old social order, semi-feudal and ecclesiastical, still lingers, as the old skin of the serpent lingers while the new skin is forming below. It is nearly ready for the sloughing. The new order is economic, co-operative and social. The priest is still honored and held in high esteem, but he is no longer, as in former days, regarded as the oracle of omniscience on all questions even on those about which, poor man he admittedly knew nothing. The process which has dethroned his reverence as ultimate arbiter of cream separators and artificial manures, and replaced him by the practical expert, is natural and wholesome.—June Busy Man's.

Many Women who are Splendid Cooks

dread having to prepare an elaborate dinner because they are not sufficiently strong to stand over an intensely hot coal range. This is especially true in summer. Every woman takes pride in the table she sets, but often it is done at tremendous cost to her own vitality through the weakening effect of cooking on a coal range in a hot kitchen.

It is no longer necessary to wear yourself out preparing a fine dinner. Even in the heat of summer you can cook a large dinner without being worn out.

New Perfection Oil Cook-stove

Gives no outside heat, no smell, no smoke. It will cook the biggest dinner without heating the kitchen or the cook. It is immediately lighted and immediately extinguished. It can be changed from a slow to a quick fire by turning a handle. These no drudgery connected with it, no coal to carry, no wood to chop. You don't have to wait fifteen or twenty minutes till its fire gets going. Apply a light and it's ready. By simply turning the wick up or down you get a slow or an intense heat on the bottom of the pot, pan, kettle or oven, and nowhere else. It has a Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping plates and food hot, drop shelves for coffee, teapot or saucepan, and even a rack for towels. It saves time, worry, health and temper. It does all a woman needs and more than she expects. Made with 1, 2, and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner sizes can be had with or without Cabinet.
