A MILLION A MINUTE

A ROMANCE OF MODERN NEW YORK AND PARIS
BY HUDSON DOUGLAS.

"Yes, ma'mselle," answered Fanchette submissively, but also in earnest approval. And her heart was filled with gratitude to the man whose forbearance had thus enabled her to snatch her lamb from the very jaws of the wolf. It would no doubt have gratified Quaintance greatly to know how he had risen in her esteem.

But Quaintance was in quite another mood in regard to her. And who shall blame him? For, while he still stood, blinking, bewildered, within the thicket in whose safe keeping he had left his car, a hundred ugly suspicions invaded his mind. The worst of these was that he might have been mistaken in his estimate of the girl.

He recalled each circumstance connected with her, from the moment when he had first noticed her on Fifth Avenue, to her hasty nod of concurrence in the errand which had so recently sundered them, and given her opportunity to escape him. He did not forget the rat-faced Frenchman, or Mrs. Smith's obvious restraint with himself, nor yet the individual he had seen seeking ingress to the bungalow.

Looking facts in the face he found himself minus a costly touring car and a round sum in cash. As sole offset to which he had acquired a plain gold bracelet, engraved with the name "Dagmar." That was what hurt him most—the idea that "Dagmar"

He stood there frowning vexedly, biting his lip, and his eyes lit on the envelope affixed to a tree-trunk by means of a woman's hat-pin. It was addressed to himself and he was soon possessed of Fanchette's impassioned appeal. It left him in gravest perplexity, quite undecided how he should act, for full five minutes before he came to the conclusion he could not very well interfere now with her high-handed procedure.

He had no doubt that the girl had gone off with her, and to New York, since the touring car was to be redelivered to him at his hotel there. And for that reason he could not well take any steps to intercept it en route. He would rather suffer its total loss uncomplainingly, if Mrs. Smith cared to take such further advantage of his complaisance, than have the girl subjected to any annoyance from which he could save her.

Some thought of pursuit crossed his mind, but he soon dismissed that. The fugitives had nearly an hour's start already, and it was not likely that the roundabout could overtake the touring car under any such handicap. There was obviously nothing for it but to make the best of his own way back to Manhattan, reserving the right to call Mrs. Smith to account for her piratical conduct at the earliest opportunity.

But he was in the worst of tempers as he once more started for the porch to procure the key of the barn. The atmosphere of mystery in which the girl seemed to move was extremely distasteful to him. He found Mrs. Smith's manoeuvres intensely irritating, and could by no means divine the nature of the alleged necessity which had deprived him of his anticipated reward for having recovered the missing bracelet.

It was partly a magnanimous impulse and partly a plan in furtherance of his own interests which caused him to stop in the station at Stormport and send on the wire whose delivery at the dock in Long Island City had so alarmed Fanchette. And, having done that, he settled down to his long, lonely run, fretting all the way to New York over these complications, by no means the least of which was the young man in the light tweed suit and Panama.

It was after eleven when he reached the garage off Broadway where he kept his car, and there the car was in its usual place. The hotel had called up soon after nine, a clerk told him, to ask that some one be sent to take Mr. Newman's automobile away from the Twenty-fourth street entrance.

Quaintance had his new purchase installed at its side, and having left strict instructions that the smaller car be very carefully cleaned and tended, hurried off to cross-question the Twenty-fourth street door-keeper. That worthy had a letter for him, and earned an easy dollar by imparting to him the details of a very brief interview with a grey-haired, elderly woman who had delivered the car to him. Whereafter the recipient of that attention hurried off to his room, there to pursue the precious missive at leisure. He had already noticed that the address had not

HIGHLY ESTEEMED LADY CALLED TO HER REWARD

Mrs. Angus S. Fraser departed this life on April 21st, after a painful illness of a few days, borne with Christian fortitude and in the sure and certain reality of a glorious resurrection.

Deceased was a daughter of the late Peter McNabb, and leaves a husband and eleven children, to mourn the loss of an affectionate wife and a kind, devoted mother. The children are Miles W. of Strathcona, Alberta; Amos D., of Fort Francis, Ontario; Archie P. and Stuart L. of Minnesota; Angus S. of Percy, N. H., and Norman S. of Fredericton Junction; Mrs. W. L. McGivnet, Berlin, N. H.; Mrs. W. H. Robinson, Taylor's Falls, Minn.; Mrs. H. T. Douglass, of Stanley, and Mrs. C. I. F. Reichard, and Miss Nancy M. Fraser at home.

Her five daughters and her youngest son, Norman, were with her during her illness and death.

The late Mrs. Fraser was in her seventy-third year, and had celebrated her golden wedding two years before.

The funeral service was held in the Methodist Church on Saturday, 23rd and was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Chowan, who preached an impressive sermon from II Timothy, IV., verses 6, 7 and 8.

Many relatives and friends passed by the altar to gaze for the last time upon the face of their friend and neighbor.

The floral tributes from the family consisted of a large cross and a harp with a broken cord, showing the first break in the family.

Interment was made in the Pleasant Valley Cemetery. Undertaker Bennett was in charge.

LITERALLY FORCED TO EAT HIS OWN WORDS

Witman, Mass., May 10.—R. L. Page, Jr., who edits a weekly paper, several days ago published an editorial on a dance of society folks. He called the dancing "public hugging," and intimated that no virtuous woman would indulge in such practices. Page, after an absence of several days, returned, and was met by citizens and forced to eat a clipping of the editorial. Page escaped his assailants and left town.

INFORMATION WANTED.

To the Editor of The Mail:

Sir—

Permit me to use enough of your valuable space to ask a question.

Is the page of the York County Auditor's Report, for which The Gleaner receives $1.60 for printing, any larger than the page of the City Council's Report, which, as it was let by tender, I have been told the same paper is printing at 70 cents? If they are the same size, the taxpayers of this county have discovered one very good reason why the York County Council have ordered an assessment strictly up to the cash value of the property assessed. No wonder J. H. Crockett can buy an automobile and employ an orchestra for his parties.

Yours etc.,

TAXPAYER.

Meductic, N. B., May 6th, 1910.

P. S.—If you have time, we'd like you also to explain the $8,000 that appears so prominently in a certain Report.

T. P.

been penned by Mrs. Smith.

"Believe me, I regret the trouble I have caused you," it said, in clear, straightforward handwriting which somehow brought back to him still more vividly the writer's fair, frank face.

"If you will kindly keep the bracelet as,"—as had been crossed out, and until substituted—"If you will kindly keep the bracelet until I find an opportunity to send for it I shall be still more grateful to you."

It said no more than that, and was signed simply "Dagmar." Paper nor envelope held any single clue to where it had been written. She did not mean that he should know her whereabouts. Quaintance judged very rightly that she would let the matter rest there, that he would hear no more from her, might count the bracelet his now. He read between the lines that she would thus pay forfeit gracefully, and end the incident. He did not blame her for a moment, but neither did he hold himself bound to accept dismissal otherwise than in specific terms. He sat up late, smoking pipe after pipe revolving fresh plans for her rediscovery.

GIRLS' DRESS.

Paris Pattern No. 2725

All Seams Allowed.

A serviceable little frock for school and every-day wear is here illustrated. The model is adaptable to serge, cheviot, wool batiste or cashmere, and is very becoming to the figure of the growing girl. The waist has a wide tuck over each shoulder, stitched from neck to waist, and the plaited skirt is attached to the waist under a belt of the material, the dress closing at the center-back. The sleeves may be the plain or bishop model, finished with a turnback cuff, trimmed with small flat brass buttons, similar buttons trimming the turn-down collar and larger ones trimming either side of the waist in the front. If desired, the collar and cuffs may be of a contrasting color or material from the frock itself. A pretty contrast would be to make the dress of navy blue serge, with collar and cuffs of plaid, the buttons being the cloth-colored variety matching the most prominent color in the plaid. The pattern is in five sizes—6 to 14 years. For a girl of 10 years the dress requires 5 1/4 yards of material 27 inches wide, 4 1/4 yards 36 inches wide or 3 1/2 yards 42 inches wide.

Price of pattern, 10 cents.
