"Would it please you to establish yourself in the Hotel des Reves, while I remain in my own quarters on this side of the river? I give you my word that I shall not molest you in any way, and you may bid your people refuse me admission if I so much as approach the palace without first obtaining your leave. I only ask you, to bear with me now and again at such social engagements as you may see fit to attend. Make any conditions you please—I agree to them all in advance. And I solemnly promise that you will have no further cause to complain of my conduct."

His voice shook slightly, so earnest was his appeal, and the girl had heard it with close attention. She was no less anxious than he to attain some less harassing mode of life than had been her lot of late, to find some safe refuge from this Stephen Quaintance whose most unexpected arrival had so disturbed her. And it did not take her long to make up her mind.

"It shall be as you wish," she said, deliberately. "But only for such time as you shall respect your promise."

"I shall break no more promises," he assured her eagerly, all that was evil in his handsome face for the nonce obliterated under the spell of her gracious presence, looking more like the gallant gentleman he might have been than old Fanchette had ever seen him before.

"I shall break no more promises, and I hope that you will one day be able to think less harshly of me. When will it suit you to remove to your hotel?"

"Now, at once."

"Your carriage waits. May I escort you?"

She shook her head.

"Fanchette will go with me."

He bowed, choking down his chagrin, schooling himself to prompt obedience since it was only by such means that he might gain her confidence.

"Then I may take my leave. And Dagmar—believe me, I am very grateful to you."

"I only seek to do what I see to be right," she answered briefly. He lingered on the threshold, not daring to hold out his hand, and she took no least step toward him.

"Will you permit me to make known our marriage?" he asked most humbly, and Fanchette could scarcely recognize in such a timid suppliant, the haughty Duc des Reves, Vicomte Aiglemont and Seigneur de la Roche-Segur.

"Tonight there is a reception at the Elysee," he went on hurriedly. "All Paris will be present. If you care to accompany me, it would be very opportune to announce it then. I have just landed from New York. My friends would assume that we had met and married there, which would save gossip. We need not deceive them."

"Very well," she agreed, willing to avoid needless notoriety if that were possible, and he withdrew, sufficiently well pleased.

Dagmar, Duchesse des Reves, heard him go downstairs with dragging feet, and sank into a chair, a tired sigh on her trembling lips.

"I could not but surrender, Fanchette," she said drearily. "There was no other way, and—"

Fanchette unfolded her in her two strong arms.

"You have done well, dear heart," he whispered, her tone a caress, holding the quivering form close in her grasp. "You have done well, and— it is best so. Forget the past. Think no more of what might have been."

Presently Fanchette set to her packing, her mistress helping her so that they might not lose a single moment in making their escape from other callers. The footman came up from the carriage to ask orders, and amid the open curiosity of the Rue des Trois Freres.

Andre especially was interested, and although Fanchette had fed him liberally for such small services as he had rendered, he could not find it in him to forgive her the rejection of his proffered comradeship. He dropped her gold piece beside that the Duke had given him and spoke sarcastically.

"Oho!" said he from his post on the doorstep. "Oho! old tongue of vinegar, is it thus that thou wouldst save sour speeches? A pleasant word is sometimes worth more than a gold piece, hein! And it may be that we have not yet heard the

DRESSES FOR THE YOUNG MISS.
Paris Patterns Nos. 3005, 3052
All seams allowed.

The waist portion of this simple frock (3005) has the fullness supplied by three tucks on the shoulders at the front and back, stitched to yoke depth, a wide box-plait ornamenting the front from yoke to hem. The five-gored skirt portion is made with a deep plaited flounce, and the net yoke is heavily outouched with self-colored or black braid. Similar braid trims the sleeves and belt, the latter hiding the joining of the waist and skirt portions. The pattern is in 3 sizes, 12 to 17 years. For a miss of 15 years, the dress requires 9½ yards of material 20 inches wide, 7½ yards 24 inches wide, 6½ yards 27 inches wide, 5 yards 36 inches wide, or 4½ yards 42 inches wide.

The semi-princess dress, buttoning down the entire front, is a highly favored style this season not only for ladies but for young girls as well. This model (3052) is made with panel front and deep plaited flounce attached to a five-gored upper section. The waist and skirt are joined under a belt of the material. The sleeves are in shirtwaist style, and the neck is finished by a chemisette and broad Dutch collar. A Gibson plait over the shoulder renders the mode unusually becoming. Mohair, serge, cashmere and linen are all adaptable. The pattern is in 3 sizes, 12 to 17 years. For a miss of 15 years, the dress will require 7½ yards of material 24 inches wide, 6½ yards 27 inches wide, 4½ yards 36 inches wide, 4½ yards 42 inches wide, or 3½ yards 54 inches wide, with ½ yard of all-over embroidery and 1½ yards of edging.

A QUEER WILL

Five Hundred Dollar Bequest to the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives to Follow the Death of a Pony.

The Secretary-Treasurer of the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumption has been advised of a bequest of $500, from an old gentleman who had resided in Simcoe County. He had a favorite pony, and according to the will this $500 is to be invested and the interest on same paid annually for the keep of the pony. At the pony's death the money is to go to the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives. The old gentleman also left $500, invested in the same way for a favorite dog.

CARRYING IT TOO FAR

And there are some men who will do their best and even their best friends.

last of thee and their fair mistress. Where there is honey one may see more than a single fly."

Nor was it long before events justified him in his premonition, for, a short hour after the two had fled, there came to the Rue des Trois Dreres in a great hurry a tall, fair man with bloodshot, quarrelsome eyes, and a dark fellow wearing a great black beard and moustache. In whom Andre discovered a fresh source of revenue, but only after he had proved to them that it was not his fault that the girl had gone. He made high terms with them, and, having taken payment for his information in advance, told them how they might find her, chuckling cheerily the while.

"You must ask the great Duc des Reves where she is now," he explained slowly, relishing their impatience to his drawl, "and when you see him you will also see the wickedest aristocrat we have left in France. Many a pretty bird he's netted, that same gentleman, and now he has her in his toils, the prettiest of them all."

"Yes, she went off in his carriage, scarcely an hour ago. But he set out on foot, to save scandal! As if any fresh scandal would affect his reputation!"

"That is the clue you have paid for, messieurs, and cheap at the price, as you will find if you follow it up. I may add, for your edification, that mademoiselle wears no ring."

TOO MANY TEACHERS

Hundreds in London are Out of Employment—From a Hundred to Two Hundred Applicants for Every Position.

There are fully qualified teachers in London who are acting as clerks, shop assistants, printers' readers, typists, and envelope addressers, and one young man is driving a cab, it was stated a few days ago at the L. C. C. Education Committee's meeting during a debate on the advisability of retaining the "college list."

The latter is a list of names selected from various training colleges as suitable candidates for teacher-ships in the Council's elementary schools. It was urged that only a comparatively few teachers trained under the auspices of the London County Council were placed on the list, and that the remainder, though they were "alike as peas," were tabooed by the country authorities, who thought they were inferior because London had not taken them.

Mr. Gauntrey said he took a plebeian last year and found that on December 1 there were 1,175 teachers in London, trained under the auspices of the London education authority, out of employment. These teachers were all handicapped against those of the rest of the country simply because they were London trained.

Some of the correspondence he had received was heartrending. One young man wrote that since December 1st, 1909, he had applied for over 100 vacancies in London or the neighborhood, and had found that the number of applicants for each post was between 100 and 200. Another had got an appointment at a Labo. Exchange.

A third, failing to get work in England, had accepted employment at a school of languages abroad, while in another instance—the most distressing case of all—a young lady who had failed to get employment after leaving Cheltenham worried so much because she was dependent on her mother that she lost her reason.

YOUNG WOMEN START FARM FOR TERRAPIN

(N. Y. World)

"Slow but sure" is bound to be the business motto of half a dozen young women of New York who have just started a new business for their sex—terrapin farming.

Miss Phoebe Frost, who keeps a shop with her sister, Miss Cordelia, at No. 42 West Thirty-ninth street, is general promoter of the scheme. The other young women include Miss Aylis Mackintosh of Brooklyn, Miss Nancy Hardy, Yonkers, and Miss Agnes Carlisle, who has been living in Philadelphia.

The girls have bought an acre and a half of ground at Great River, L. I., and a stock of "seed terrapin" from the South. John Vincent of Tineboro, W. Va., an old hand at the business will get the Long Island farm well started, but after that the owners will run it.

"I know it's a novelty," said Miss Frost yesterday, "but that's just why we are going to make a bit. The market is always way up for good diamond-back terrapin, and we have already made arrangements with dealers here to take all we will send them."

"The work isn't a bit hard. We have just a dear little farmhouse on our property and will lead a real pastoral life—much better than a broiling existence in a hot and noisy city. We'll pick berries and have a garden and go boating and tramping and swimming and fishing when we are not feeding the terrapin."

"It's a bit lonely where we're going, but we're not afraid of being disturbed. I shall keep a pistol on the mantelpiece, and I can use it, too, if necessary. I'm not going to be robbed or murdered or even frightened, I assure you."

"So many of the occupations taken up by women nowadays are so frightfully overcrowded it is a long, hard struggle to get anywhere. I have purposely chosen a new industry because it holds so many more opportunities. It is the first explorer who stakes out the best mine."

MUST GO TO CHURCH TO GO TO BALL GAMES

Pittsburg, Pa., May 30—The ministers of the baseball clubs which have been holding Sunday exhibition games have reached an agreement whereby the Sunday baseball games will continue and the attendance at the churches, it is thought, will increase proportionately. Hereafter, according to the manager of the A. J. Martini's, one of the best known amateur nines in the country, no person will be allowed to attend the Sunday exhibition games conducted by that club unless the patron is able to present a ticket which is obtained only at certain Pittsburg churches after the Sunday morning service. These tickets will be given only to persons who attend the Sunday morning church service. No person who does not sit out the service, no matter what the length of the sermon may be, will be given a ticket.

BALL TICKETS AT CHURCH

This amicable arrangement was reached through a suggestion made by Constable Jacob Stine of Port Vue, who not only is an ardent baseball fan, but a regular church attendant as well. He believed he had a perfect right to go to a ball game Sunday afternoon, and devised this method to force other ball players and fans, not as religiously inclined as himself, to attend church. As a result of this amicable arrangement baseball tickets will be distributed next Sunday in several local churches. Also the retaliatory steps forcing the churches to do without paid vocalists, as threatened by the baseball magnates, will be stopped. District Attorney Blakeley has promised to take no measures against the ball players unless further informations are made, and the ministers have promised to make no further informations.
