THE ARROWS OF FATE

This was not told to Gilbert, and it was of him she at once thought when she got up. She knew well enough how dear to him had been her bright cheeks, her clear skin, her pretty little features, now all scarred and withered. She could not help telling herself that she was ugly now—horribly ugly. Even the shining chestnut coil was gone. At twenty-five she looked forty—a forty over which devastation as of forest fires had passed.

When Margaret saw all this, and thought of the past, a great fear grew in her heart. Here was an end of their love, she said to herself, because no man could continue to love a disfigured creature such as she was now. Gilbert had loved a bright and beautiful girl, and if he asked her to come to him, how could she offer him the love of a permanently old, withered woman?

Thus it was that as he now in every letter urged her to end the long waiting and come out to him, she could not answer. She wrote affectionately and brightly as before, but the one subject he kept insisting upon she ignored. She simply wrote as if he had said nothing.

She thought that with time a solution of the difficulty might be found. She dared not tell him the truth; she dared not go to him and be witness of the shock he would experience. The strain began to wear on her, and she became nervous and anxious.

Gilbert, at the other end of the world, was both hurt and puzzled at the girl's letters. He began to fear that all was not right, or that perhaps, as things had remained in the same position for so long, she had become anesthetic, and hesitated now to make the effort and come to him.

He applied for long leave to go home. Time slips away in writing and answering letters that travel between opposite ends of the earth, and by the time Gilbert arrived again in the old country to visit his sweetheart, some four years had passed since the day of his departure.

Margaret knew when he was to arrive, and the nearer the time grew the more nervous and anxious she became. What would he say? What would he do? And what should she do? These questions she could not answer.

Even if he concealed his chagrin when he saw her again, how could she let him, out of mere generosity, make her his wife and take her away, knowing as she did that he could no longer love her? Then she wished that she had told him what had happened, or that she had bidden him stay out where he was. Anything but this coming ordeal.

She tried to resign herself, to crush the rebellion in her heart, but she was still young.

When at last the day came, and the bronzed young New Zealander called at the house, Margaret's nerves entirely forsook her. Gilbert was kept waiting for a long time—longer than he thought was right, under the circumstances.

This time was spent by Margaret in trying to calm her nervous fears and her agitation. At the end of it she burst into tears, and declared that she could not face him.

Mother and sister tried to reason with her, but to no avail.

"I can't meet him. I can't see his disgust and disappointment. I love him so—it would kill me."

At last, in despair, she turned to her sister.

"Go, you, Flossie, and see him!"

"I?" asked Flossie.

"Yes, yes; go and see him. Some one must see him. Do this for me, dear."

"But what shall I tell him?"

A sudden thought struck her.

"Tell him you are I—tell him you are Margaret!"

This would not have been so difficult to believe. Flossie had been a girl at school when Gilbert left; he had but vaguely known of her existence, and had never seen her. She closely resembled her elder sister. And one might have thought her a Margaret, who, in four years had changed a little, but looked not a day older.

Flossie went to do her sister's bidding. The words were on her lips to explain to him all the truth, and perhaps appeal to his chivalry.

She stood in the doorway, bright and fair as Margaret had been the day he last saw her.

"Margaret!" he cried. "My little girl!"

She caught her breath with astonishment—and fear.

He kissed her cold hand, and drew her to him.

"No kiss, Margaret, after all these years?"

She suffered him to kiss her. She was afraid to check his enthusiasm, his frankness, his freshness of the returned traveller.

For an hour he talked to her of his home in the far South, and she answered in monosyllables—trembling, pale and blushing each time he uttered the beloved name.

"You haven't grown a day older," he declared. "How well you waited for me, dear little Maggie."

"Pneumonia"

Pneumonia is nothing more or less than "Lung Fever," or as it used to be called, "Inflammation of the Lungs" and the results come entirely from a local source; such as taking a violent cold.

There is more or less difficulty in breathing; a cough, at first dry, but soon accompanied by raising a thick, sticky, rusty-colored matter, composed of a mixture of phlegm and blood.

There is only one way to prevent Pneumonia, and that is to cure the cold just as soon as it appears. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup will do this quickly and effectively.

Mrs. G. W. Bowman, Pattullo, Ont. writes: "Three years ago I caught a cold which ended in a severe attack of Pneumonia. Since that time, at the beginning of each winter, I seem to catch cold very easily. I have been so hoarse that I was unable to speak loud enough to be heard across the room. Last winter, however, a friend advised me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, saying it had helped her. I bought a bottle and before it was half used I was completely cured. I also find it a good medicine for the children when they have colds."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is pine trees the trade mark; the price 25 cents.

A ROYAL EXILE'S RECEPTION.

(London Chronicle)

Royal exiles have not always been so warmly welcomed in this country as King Manuel, whom our own King and Queen propose to visit shortly after his arrival. In the recently published memoirs of Princess Murat there is an indignant description of the reception accorded Napoleon III. in 1871.

"When the Emperor went to Windsor by the Queen's invitation accompanied by the Duc de Bassano and the officers of his suite, he found that only a small pony carriage had been sent to meet him—all that was thought necessary for a fallen Sovereign. The Empress was loud in expressing her outraged feelings. . . . Lord Granville and Mr. Gladstone were, I know, horrified when they heard of the blunder. I think that an apology was sent to His Majesty, blaming some official of the court for the tactless incivility."

MAN BURNED TO DEATH IN CH. CAGO

None of the firemen were injured seriously.

BIG SEAL PUTS UP STIFF FIGHT

(Richibucto Review.)

While sitting in the cabin of their boat Saturday afternoon, near the mouth of the river, Daniel O'Leary and James Curwen were somewhat startled by a sudden and violent rocking of the craft and the strange antics of a new comer, which proved to be a very large seal, which had jumped, or perhaps, as they put it, down into the boat. The men admit that their nerves were strained for a few minutes by the unexpected addition to their number and the merry stunts that were indulged in by the newcomer. With an oar and a piece of board the boatmen took a hand in the proceedings and before they got through all the available clubs were broken up and they were compelled to take the tiller to conquer the phoca. The marine prisoner put up a terrific battle and made several snaps at its captors who were compelled to move cautiously and lively to keep clear of its attacks. Seals are very seldom seen in these waters and the capture of one, in the river, is a very rare occurrence.

Neilson's*The Chocolates that are Different

There is no such thing as "Chocolates Made Fresh Every Hour." Any dealer, who claims to sell Chocolates an hour after they are made, either mis-states the facts or knows nothing about bon-bon or chocolate making.

All chocolate creams, when first made, are hard, and must be kept at least a fortnight before they become soft again.

Neilson's Chocolates are always matured for at least a month. This maturing brings the centers of the chocolates back to their original creamy state—and allows the delicious fruit centers to blend perfectly with the cream.

"Cherries in Maraschino, Chocolate Dipped" are as different as they are delicious. A plump French cherry in Maraschino, surrounded by a melting cream, enclosed in a globe of indescribably rich chocolate.

Neilson's Chocolates come in 33 different packages—containing something different and delightful for every "sweet tooth".

If you are unable to obtain Neilson's Chocolates in your vicinity, send us 80c. and we will send you a special package of the most delicious assorted Chocolates you ever ate.
