A MILLION A MINUTE

A ROMANCE OF MODERN NEW YORK AND PARIS
BY HUDSON DOUGLAS.

CHAPTER IX.

SWEET ARE THE USES OF AD-VERTISEMENT.

The spurious Stephen Quaintance thus successfully launched on his nefarious enterprise, and the man whose empty place in the world he meant to usurp firm in his resolve to have nothing to do with the dead Miles Quaintance's project or the money it would produce, time ticked away five full days of the few that were left before the twelve months should be up and the dead man's adopted daughter become entitled to all those millions.

The real Stephen Quaintance felt safely assured that the strange precautions he had taken for her welfare would in due course result satisfactorily for her and himself. He had paid a long price, at his own discretion, for the right to live his own life, to follow out his own ambitions. He had only one aim now, and it engrossed him entirely, to the exclusion of all other interests.

He had spent these days in an exhaustive but fruitless search of the Long Island suburbs, where it seemed just possible that the girl whom he meant to marry might have her home. The only faint clue he possessed that was afforded by the rufous Frenchman's appearance at Rockaway Beach, very vaguely confirmed by what he had overheard from his own offensive namesake at the Cornucopia Club.

The Night and Day Bank had notified him that the funds which it had collected for him were now freely at his disposal, and he had paid for the car in which he roamed the countryside, with an especially keen eye to the multitudinous roundabouts he met on his many excursions. Once, at O'Ferral's behest, he had taken Corroyer with him, but that volatile youth's seemingly irrepressible spirits and equally inexhaustible tail for getting into mischief, did not induce him to repeat the experiment. Until he should have achieved success in his quest he would not be in any mood for making merry. And while he was in such a state of mind it suited him best to be quite alone.

There were now and then moments when the magnitude of the task he had undertaken depressed him, but, none the less, he was fixed in his purpose to persevere. However it had come about, he was altogether possessed by the memory of a girl's face. And even while he, on occasion chafed against its sudden, mysterious potency of influence over his actions while he was still sane enough to realize that he might never see it again, he was determined that, if it should end so, he should not have to blame himself for any failure or remissions.

On the evening of the fifth day's futile pilgrimage he passed, preoccupied, down Broadway, from the garage at which he kept his car to the Fifth Avenue Hotel where he had made his permanent headquarters, trying in vain to evolve some more likely scheme of search. The possibility of employing a detective agency had, of course, occurred to him, but he had dismissed it at once and for good as repugnant with all his ideas. There seemed to be nothing for it but to cover every inch of Manhattan, and then try elsewhere if that produced no result. He must be thorough in all his methods.

A bell-boy caught sight of him as he entered the vestibule of the hotel, and, knowing him always liberal in his acknowledgement of such service, brought him word that there was a telephone message awaiting him, which turned out to be from O'Ferral, and merely said:

"See tonight's Telegram, page nine, second column, ad. twenty-five."

He hurried back to the door and bought a Telegram from the newsboy there, spread it out on a desk within and, running his finger rapidly down the column prescribed, whose caption was "Automobiles, &c.," found advertisement twenty-five as follows:

"For Sale, Cadillac, Model Q., '05, two-seated, with hood. In perfect running order. $450. Apply 3996 Telegram."

With these words firmly fixed in his memory he made for the 'phone at speed and called up O'Ferral. But the correspondent was not at home, and neither was he to be heard of at the editorial offices of the paper on whose staff he served. Quaintance therefore sat down to compose a reply to the advertisement. It was difficult to convey neither too much nor too little, with the grave risk hanging over his head that some other purchaser might anticipate him, that the advertiser might even ignore his communication. But he finally solved the problem of what to say, what to leave unsaid, had a special messenger take the resultant epistle

SEVERE INITIATION IN GIRLS' SCHOOL

Bridgeport School Board Investigating
Certain Ceremonies of Alpha Sorority of High School.

Bridgeport, Conn., April 28.—Macaroni cooked in soap and labelled "angle worms" had to be eaten, and a cocktail of vinegar, molasses, salt, pepper and the white of an egg had to be gulped down before a girl could join the Alpha Sorority in the High School here, according to testimony offered to the Board of Education.

A score of witnesses appeared. The girl is a wreck, witnesses testified. It will be three years before her stomach is again in normal condition.

NOW IN RETREAT.

Lorraine Clark, daughter of Fayette C. Clark, a member of the Lower House of the Connecticut General Assembly, was the victim. Her nerves shattered, she is now in a retreat at Linden Lodge, Brattleboro, Vt., recruiting her health.

Miss Ethel Havens, daughter of Col. E. H. Havens, of Governor Weeks' staff, gave a graphic description of the ceremonies attendant upon Miss Clark's initiation, which she said were practically the same in every initiation. Expert chemists, physicians, and lawyers were included among the spectators.

After Herbert Smith, a chemist of the Farist Steel Company, had demonstrated with an elaborate experiment that the compounds prepared by the girls for Miss Clark to eat and drink were not harmful, he declined to drink the concoction, when Major William H. Marigold, president of the Board of Education, and postmaster of the city, asked him to do so.

OYSTERS AS POLLYWOGS.

Miss Havens said that the sorority blindfolded Miss Clark and gave her three strips of macaroni three inches long which had been boiled in soap for half an hour, telling her they were angle worms. Then they gave her two oysters, with sugar on them telling her they were pollywogs. When she had eaten them the girls gathered about her and glibed her.

Then they gathered and in conversation among themselves discussed the girl's symptoms and speculated within earshot of the victim on her chances of her ever being herself again. Then they forced her to drink a cocktail made of molasses, vinegar, salt, pepper and white of an egg, to eat a raw egg, and to drink milk and sugar from a nursing bottle. These were the kitchen stunts, so-called, handed down from early history of the sorority.

Other stunts were the "branding" of victims. First a candle was melted and the hot wax dripped upon the arm of the candidate. Then a hot poker was shown to the victim, who was immediately blindfolded. While the candidate's shoulder was bared and a piece of ice was applied the effect of burning flesh was secured upon the candidate's senses by plunging the poker into a piece of raw meat.

Following the initiation Miss Clark was indisposed, and later became a nervous wreck, the direct result, her family physician testified, of the initiation.

CARE OF THE TEETH

Care of the teeth is really more important than care of the hands and face, as disease-producing bacteria find their way from them to the intestines, often causing much trouble. In an editorial in Good Health, the warning is sounded that all civilized people must take care or they will become permanently toothless. Very thorough mastication is pronounced as one of the remedies, also cleaning the teeth before and after each meal. They should be kept polished and glistening.

by hand to its destination rather than trust the mails, and went off much elated to dine with Cornoyer at Rector's, whom he surprised by his hitherto unsuspected fund of good fellowship.

Later in the evening he again called up O'Ferral's rooms, and this time it was the correspondent himself who answered the 'phone.

"H'lo, Steve," said he. "Get my message?"

"I did. I've sent in an answer already. How did you happen across the ad.?"

O'Ferral laughed. "Faculty of observation again, I suppose," came the cheery reply. "Hope you'll have luck with it, Steve. I'm only sorry I can't do better than that to help you. I'm off tomorrow."

"The devil you are!" A long pause. "When d'you think you'll be back?"

"No idea at all. Wish I had! And say, Steve. Don't tell anyone that I'm out of town. No, not even Cornoyer. Keep an eye on him for me. He's not a bad sort when you know him. Must ring off now. Good-bye, Steve."

"Good-bye, old chap, and the best of luck. Let me know here when you return."

NOW SUBSISTING ON WATER ALONE

Motorman Giving His Stomach a Three Weeks Vacation--Will Break His Fast This Morning.

Brockton, Mass., April 27.—Next Friday morning James H. Yancey, 24, a motorman employed by the Old Colony street railway company, will end a three-weeks' fast, by which he is trying to cure a bad case of stomach trouble.

Although he has lost nearly 50 pounds and now weighs but little over 110, Yancey declares he has successfully battled with the malady that was slowly stealing away his vitality, and says that he never felt better in his life.

For the past 21 days Yancey has lived on nothing but water, hot water for the most part.

He was troubled with severe stomach ailments some weeks ago, and consulted many doctors without success. It was on the return from a doctor's visit that he purchased a book in which he read of fasting as a cure for stomach disorders.

He weighed 153 pounds when he started his fast and the first week he lost 20 pounds. He says the second day was hard, but the worst of all was on his seventh day. Since then he says he has not had any great craving for food.

Friday he will eat his first meal, but will not start on meat, intending to abstain from all kinds of meats and live on vegetables and cereals.

Mr. Yancey lives at 1440 Main St., and before coming to this city made his home in Virginia, where he was born.

SEVENTY POUNDS OF MILK PER DAY

In this busy age when Canada is making a name for herself with big things, water powers, timber limits, railroads, real estate deals and so on, it is perhaps as well to remind ourselves that the ordinary farm operations occasionally show very big things. We hear now and then of poor cows and low yields of milk, so we need constantly to bear in mind that huge things are accomplished by the proper combination of the brainy dairyman, good feed and the selected cow. We have plenty of good cows in Canada, some that give 10,000, 15,000 and 20,000 pounds of milk in a year. One or two big records were made in March by excellent cows, one lot of six in one herd giving a total yield of 9,388 pounds of milk, and some giving as much as seventy pounds of milk in one day; think of it, enough to supply the needs of 56 ordinary people at the rate of one pint each. Such cows are not picked up every day, they are not average cows, but they are an indication of what is being accomplished by brain work, applied intelligence in dairying. We need to realize that it is perfectly feasible to do a good deal more raising, not only the much needed raising of the general standard of the average cow so that the 3,000 pounder is no longer "in our midst" but the raising of a good many more cows of at least the 10,000 pound type. Dairy records, of milk produced and feed consumed, will soon show which cow in the stable of the average dairyman is not worth keeping, and which will respond to more liberal feeding so as to produce milk in abundance. Cow testing associations will help every dairyman to success; join the nearest to you or assist in forming a new one.
