"I bought the Duchesse's car from her before she left the other side," he explained rapidly, "and that's how I came to know that it was he who held her up in it. But she did not kiss him."

"Of course not," Cornoyer remarked cheerfully. "I did not believe him. He's always too soused to know what he says. Forget him!"

"Tell me all you know about him, J. J.," Quaintance begged, his mind full of dark and deadly suspicions. "Who is he?" Where does he hail from? What did he tell you tonight?"

"His name is Quaintance," Cornoyer replied steadily. "Stephen Quaintance. He told me when I first met him that he had just come from Africa to New York to marry his cousin, because she was a millionairess. He told me a lot of hot air, too, about his travels—where he could get a lot of rose-diamonds whenever he wanted to, and so on. Tonight he said he had found her and she was a peach—the same one he told us about at the club. And so he is going to marry her."

"But how is he going to do that, if Des Reves has married her first, eh?"

"He's a damned impostor," cried Quaintance, his mind made up on that point at least, and quite unable to contain himself. Cornoyer looked at him in surprise, so strained and tense was his tone.

"I knew Stephen Quaintance," he went on excitedly, "and that scoundrel's trying to pass for him. If you see him again, Cornoyer, find out where he lives and let me know with out a moment's delay. It's a matter of the most urgent importance to me. I'll tell you the rest of the trouble some other time. Here's the Rue St. Roch. I won't ask you—I must talk it all over with O'Ferral first, and—"

He shook hands hastily, jumped out as the can stopped at his door. "You won't forget, J. J.," he urged anxiously. "It will be the very greatest favor that you can do me to let me know where I can lay hands on that fellow."

He ran upstairs, his mind in a frenzy. Could it be possible that Miles Quaintance's adopted daughter was now the Duchesse des Reves! That were surely too cruel an irony to blind fate, and yet—judging by all he knew, it seemed but too probable. He clattered into O'Ferral's rooms in an agony of belated enlightenment. But they were empty. He found on his own parlor table a note from his friend which said, "Have been called away. Don't know when I may get back."

CHAPTER XX.

THE PRODIGAL GOES BACK TO
BRISTOL.

"May I telephone in the morning to inquire how you are?" the Duc des Reves asked wistfully of his wife as he bade her good-night in the corridor of the Elysee opposite the ladies' boudoir. There he met her when she had arrived at the place, and she had forbidden him to see her further on her departure, not caring to afford him opportunity for any less public leave taking.

"Yes, if you wish to do so," she answered without much interest, and, having bowed to him, went her way. He watched the straight, slender figure disappear down the broad passage, the pale silk cloak she wore outlined against the crimson carpet between two thickets of green plants overtopped by tall palms. And then he turned reluctantly back to the salon, to spend another half hour there as he had promised her that he would. It hurt him that she should deem necessary such precaution against his following her, and yet he could not blame her. He would prove to her presently that she might henceforth trust him even as he was ready to trust her.

He had been greatly gratified by the reception they had met at the hands of society, knowing how little he himself had done to earn any but the most frigid tolerance. Their first evening together had been a great success to all outward seeming, and beyond that he need not yet aspire. In time he would show his world that even such a prodigal as he had been might make a model husband, and at the moment he must baffle its curiosity as to the wife for whose sweet sake he had undertaken that radical change. He stayed for a full half-hour, meeting inquiries and congratulations alike

DOWVILLE

June 9.—Although the weather has not been ideal for farming for a length of time, yet seeding is about over for this season, and the hay crop is looking well for this time of year.

Mr. and Mrs. Meril Hatfield and son have gone to Fredericton for a few days' visit with friends.

The quiet of this village was broken Saturday afternoon by the shouts of four drunken young men who had been occupants of an automobile but had been thrown over a precipice among rocks and brush with their car only prevented from being turned over by being caught against a tree. After a time horses were brought and the car hauled up in to the road while waiting the time was passed in singing unmentionable songs and sprinkling their car and the road with liquor of which they had a case. Two young ladies who came along at the time were compelled to turn back. Those young men were known by name.

with a bland courtesy which irritated his former intimates to a degree.

When he reached his rooms in the Rue St. Honore, Jules Chevreil was absent and that annoyed him. A sudden distaste of the over-luxurious atmosphere there overcame him. It was too reminiscent of much that he would fain have forgotten. He resolved, in his new-found ambition, to give them up, and also to rid himself of Chevreil at the first opportunity. The fellow knew far too much about him, had of late grown very insolent in his knowledge. And, rather than incur delay in his own reformation, he would remove from that place of evil memories on the instant. He found a suit-case, was packing it with his own hands, when Jules came sauntering in from the garage where he had been cleaning the car which Seager had just redelivered.

Jules looked contemptuously at his employer's preparations. He had anticipated some stupidity of the sort, so changed had Monsieur shown himself since his brief visit to the Rue des Trois Freres. He had further foreseen that it would not suit him to stay in Monsieur's service, and when his first impertinent remark earned him immediate dismissal he merely smiled with supercilious indifference.

"It is to be supposed that Monsieur does not mean to turn me into the street at this hour?" said he. "You may remain until I remove the furniture," the Duc replied briefly, and set out, carrying his own suit-case, servantless, to an hotel. Jules still smiled sardonically.

NATIVE OF YORK CO.

DEAD IN MONTANA

Robert Barker the Son of a Loyalist
Who Settled at Barker's Point
Passes to His Reward.

(Woodstock Sentinel)

The Great Falls Leader, of Montana, contains the following death notice of Mr. Robert Barker, who died May 23rd, 1910. Mr. Barker was a former resident of Woodstock, but left here for the west several years ago. Many of the older residents of the town will remember him well. He was a brother-in-law of Mrs. E. Williams, of this town.

"Robert Barker, better known to thousands of Montana people as 'Gov' Barker, passed away at the home of his son, D. L. S. Barker, in Neihart last evening at 5 o'clock. The remains will reach this city tomorrow and the funeral will probably be Saturday from the home of the widow, Mrs. Jane Barker, on Fourth Avenue, north, and interment in High St. cemetery, beside the remains of his son, E. J. Barker, who met a tragic death in a railroad wreck 10 years or more ago. Carter, a son, is resident of Mexico, and Mrs. M. Edwards, a daughter, is a resident of Long Beach, Cal., but it is doubtful if either can reach here in time for the funeral. The cause of death was an attack of grip, added to ailments that came to one nearing the century milestone of life.

Robert Barker was born within two months of 90 years ago, his father being one of the staunch loyalists of the time, and for that reason migrating from New York to Canada during the trouble of 1812 with Great Britain; locating at New Brunswick he organized the first company ever organized in Canada, and for his services was warmly commended by the crown being presented with a land grant of much worth near Fredericton, which is today known as Barker's Point. Another Robert Barker, great grandfather of the Robert Barker who died yesterday, was one of those who came over with William Penn, a warm friend and adviser of the Quaker statesman for many years, and one of the leaders in settlement of the colonies.

"Gov' Barker has been a resident of Montana for a quarter of a century, coming here with his sons, and for the greater portion of the time has lived in Neihart having a residence in this city, but preferring to make his home in the mighty mountains. For many years he has been one of the most familiar characters of the city, and his visits here were in the nature of receptions, everyone having a kindly word and liking for the old gentleman, who, though bowed with years, was bright and witty as the best of them and whose mind never for one moment became impaired. Having almost the entire Bible at his tongue's end 'Gov' was always ready with a pat quotation to clinch an argument or uphold a theory, and was most entertaining at all times.

The problem of life and death concerned 'Gov' but as an onlooker laid his quaint philosophy and lack of any fear of the latter, made his observations direct to the point and always assured him of listeners. A gentle, kindly old man, whose three score and ten was past two decades ago, the death of 'Gov' Barker will be learned by thousands of friends with sincere regret.

The dead man leaves, besides his widow, J. C. E. Barker and Herbert Barker, of Great Falls, D. L. S. Barker of Neihart and Carter Barker, of Mexico, sons; and Mrs. M. Edwards, of Long Beach, Cal., and Miss Violet Barker, of Great Falls, daughters. The sons are well known mining men and have wide acquaintance throughout the west."

(Note:—The Montana Newspaper man who wrote this obituary was evidently not strong on historical dates and Canadian place names. "Fredericton" means this city. The Loyalists came to this province thirty years before 1812.)

GIRLS' ONE-PIECE DRESS.
Paris Pattern No. 2838

All Seams Allowed.

No style is more becoming to the growing girl than one of these semi-fitted one-piece dresses, which preserve the long lines of the figure without outlining it to any great extent. The model illustrated is developed in pink poplin, which washes as well as linen and gives an equal amount of wear. Two wide tucks, either side of the front and back, give a broad-shouldered effect that is very becoming. They are stitched from shoulder to waist line, giving the necessary fullness to the skirt extension, which is finished with a wide hem. The round neck is trimmed with a band of pink and white striped linen, through which the dress fastens with flat white pearl buttons. The narrow elbow sleeves are finished with turnback cuffs of the linen, trimmed with pearl buttons, and the shaped belt, which fastens at the center back, is also of the linen, slipped through narrow straps at the under-arm seams. The pattern is in 6 sizes—4 to 14 years. For a girl of 10 years the dress as illustrated requires 3½ yards of material 36 inches wide, with ¼ yards of contrasting material 30 or more inches wide; or of one material it needs 4 yards 27 inches wide, 2½ yards 36 inches wide, or 2½ yards 42 inches wide.

Price of pattern, 10 cents.
