A ROMANCE OF MODERN NEW YORK AND PARIS
BY HUDSON DOUGLAS.

"I—surely I've seen this car somewhere before," he remarked tentatively, rising from an inspection of the rear tires, and regarding her from behind the hood.

"There are many of the same make," she replied very shortly, and her lips snapped together again.

"I think it was this one," he maintained, and she let his contention pass without either assent or contradiction. He found her niggardliness of speech highly aggravating.

A bright thought suddenly struck him. He made a most workmanlike examination of every vital part.

"Is four-fifty the lowest you'll take?" he asked, for the sake of appearance, and she relaxed her air of detachment a little.

"It is worth more," she said, with the first sign of feeling she had yet shown, a faint expression of anxiety in her eyes. "It is worth more. I would not be willing to take less, and I ask so little because I desire to sell it at once."

"All right, then," he answered. "I'll take it. If you will allow me to write a cheque and let me have your receipt we can call the deal square."

But the suggestion did not seem to meet with her approval either. She glanced toward the closed door under the porch, and again at him.

"If you will let me have the cheque when you come or send for the car, that will be sufficient," she offered. "Then I will give a receipt also."

Quaintance smiled inwardly. He had foreseen as much.

"I mean to take it away with me now, if I may," he said pleasantly. "My car will tow it with ease, and—"

She made up her mind to accept the inevitable, although will ill enough grace.

"There's only the kitchen," she said doubtfully, but turned toward it without further speech.

He followed her dumbly, well pleased, through the porch into a small square room, which, except for the cook-stove, might have served for parlor, so comfortably was it furnished, so dainty were all its appointments. She crossed it, in haste to close the door which led through to a room adjoining, but not before he had caught a glimpse of its interior also. And what he saw there caused him to draw a deep breath of contentment.

It was a sunny, pleasant chamber, with a wide window looking out to sea and a low couch thereat, upon which lay the same hat that the girl had worn at Martin's. But she herself was nowhere visible.

The grey-haired woman set a chair beside the table, laid pen and ink before him. He drew a well-filled note-case from one pocket, and, opening that to get his check-book out, found, as he had known he would, that he might more conveniently pay cash for his new purchase. The woman looked well pleased when he explained that to her, and sat down in his place as soon as he had counted out the necessary bills, to write him a receipt.

When she had handed him that, it would have appeared that he had no excuse for lingering, but he had yet one more card to play.

"On second thoughts," he remarked as he moved toward the door, "I will ask you to keep the small car for me till tomorrow, if you'll be so good."

"Will you come for it yourself, or send?" she asked quickly.

"I'll come."

"At what time?"

"Whenever it is most convenient for you."

"At this hour then, and not later than to-morrow," she agreed grudgingly.

"It is not that I would be disobliging," she added in haste, "but—"

"You have placed me under an obligation," Quaintance assured her. "I shall be punctual—at this hour, to-morrow."

He bowed, and, as he stepped down from the porch, she closed the door from within. He could hear a bolt shot behind him, and was glad that she had not waited to watch him go. Half way down the track, and well out of sight of the little embowered dwelling, he backed his big motor carefully into the thicket between two trees which allowed him space and no more to conceal it, and went on toward the road aloft.

He could not intrude further meantime on the jealously guarded privacy of the bungalow, but he knew no valid reason why he should deny himself a glimpse of it from the shore at a safely respectful distance.

Appearing his conscience by means of such reasoning, he turned along

NORD ALEXIS, HAYTI'S EX-PRESIDENT, IS DEAD

Deposed Ruler Passed Away at Kingston, Jamaica, at Advanced Age—
Had Had Stormy Career.

Kingston, Ja., May 1—Nord Alexis ex-president of Hayti, died here today.

His death occurred after a brief illness. His health, however, had been considerably broken by the experiences of the last year and a half, for he was deposed from the presidency and sent into exile. He had been a refugee here since the revolution of 1908 and was possessed of considerable property in Kingston.

A picturesque ruler was removed from office when Nord Alexis was compelled to abdicate and flee from Hayti on Dec. 2, 1908. Port au Prince was then in the hands of the revolutionists, and General Antoine Simon, who afterwards became president, was marching up with an army of 5,000 men.

Nord Alexis was variously estimated at from ninety to one hundred years of age. He was a descendant of one of the oldest families of Hayti. He took part in many wars, and in 1896 rebelled against Hippolyte, who previously had overthrown President Legitime. Hippolyte died the same year and he was succeeded by General Sbm.

Nord Alexis became president of Hayti in 1902. His term was to have expired May 15, 1909, but his administration was not conspicuously successful. Prominent politicians grumbled because he did not give them what they considered their fair share of the spoils and punished some notorious looters of the national treasury.

Early in 1908, the movement against Alexis gained great strength and in March a reign of terror was subsequently inaugurated in Port au Prince.

The government sent out troops, who seized many of the revolutionists and summarily put a number of them to death. Warships of several nations hastened to Port au Prince, and their arrival secured the lives and property of foreigners.

For only a few months, however, did Alexis maintain his rule. In November he ordered General Antoine Timon, commander of the south, to Port au Prince, and confer with him on the political situation.

General Simon refused to comply and took up arms against the president. His march to the capital was a triumphant one and on his approach to Port au Prince the people of that city turned against their president. They surrounded the palace and took possession of the city. At the last moment Alexis yielded to the pleas of those about him and decided to take refuge on board the French warship Duguay Trouin.

MORE TERRITORY ADDED TO EMPIRE

Durban, Africa, April 30—Advices received here state that Herd's Island, in the South Indian Ocean, which was discovered by Captain Herd, in 1853, was annexed on behalf of Great Britain on March 24, by a party aboard the Durban whaler Mangora. A cairn was erected supporting the Union Jack, under which the declaration of annexation was signed.

Herd's Island is a desolate spot, covered for the greater part with ice and glaciers. It is about twenty-five miles in length and nine miles in width and is the largest of a group visited by Captain Herd of the American ship Oriental, in November, 1853. The British warship Challenger the road, and followed it for a short quarter-mile, when he once more took to the wood, turning left again toward the sea, threading his way through the tangle of undergrowth in the thick belt of trees till he came suddenly upon a narrow curve of sand with the wide waters of the bay lying blue beyond it. And at the same time instant the faint, far echo of a most plaintive melody thrilled his attentive ears.

He stopped and harkened, his pulses hammering. The tender notes which swelled and ebbed on the uncertain breeze came from no bird's throat. Some one was singing, some one hidden from sight behind the sandpit that formed one horn of the half-moon shore on which he had emerged. The bungalow lay unseen beyond the other. He stood between it and the singer.

It had been his intention to saunter unconcernedly back past that shrine, brave, if need were, its guardian's resentment, but now he saw, very clearly and all at once, that any such trespass would be unpardonable, that it would be only manly to turn the other way. He did so, strolling with an assumption of all the innocence at his command, toward the bridge which shut him in on that side. And, crossing it, absent-mindedly, hands clasped behind him, head bent as if in deep meditation, stopped suddenly, looked about him in well stimulated surprise.

OWEN MORAN HELD FOR MANSLAUGHTER

San Francisco, April 30—Owen Moran, the English lightweight pugilist, was formally charged with manslaughter today as a result of the death of Tommy McCarthy, his opponent in last night's prize fight. Five other men, seconds and attendants of the two pugilists were booked on the same charge.

When the principals and seconds later were arraigned before Police Judge Conlan, Willie and Johnny McCarthy, brothers of the dead fighter, were released on their own recognizance while the others were held on $500 bond each, or $100 cash bail.

In his cell today Moran mourned the death of his opponent. "Poor, poor, boy," he said weeping, "it was an accident, but oh, such a terrible one."

The Englishman declared the fight was a frameup, the agreement being that McCarthy was to be allowed to stay through fifteen minutes.
