Give your servants GOLD DUST to clean with, treat them rightly and you will have few occasions to insert a "help wanted" ad

They say a good workman is known by his tools. You cannot expect your maid to keep everything ship-shape unless you give her every modern help. To keep house without GOLD DUST is to do work by hard, old-fashioned methods. For cleaning everything and anything about the house—from cellar to attic—GOLD DUST is worth its weight in gold. It cuts grease and dirt like magic, does away with scouring and scrubbing, and saves time and tempers.

Your servant can do more and better work and keep sweet with the aid of GOLD DUST in all household cleaning.

ATTEMPTS TO BURN
GIRL'S DORMITORY

Andover, N.H., Sept. 15.—An attempt to burn the girls dormitory at Porter's Academy here last night was frustrated after a blaze had been started. Mrs. Eugene Sawyer, the matron is in danger of death today, from a blow delivered by the incendiary in making his escape.

Mrs. Sawyer on entering the basement suddenly at 8 o'clock discovered a strange man in the act of applying a match to a pile of wood. She screamed and the intruder knocked her unconscious. Persons who heard the outcry, ran to the basement and extinguished the blaze.

The man had escaped. Mrs. Sawyer was soon under the care of the physicians. The doctors say today that her condition is grave. The academy authorities can find no motive for the attempt to set fire to the dormitory. The building accommo-

Now is the time to think of the new evening gowns that must be made for the coming season. Here are a few things that New York tells us:

The best materials are to be brocades, gold and silver threaded, and velvet brocaded chiffons, with a highly raised figure; brocaded satins and plain-colored marquisette and chiffons. It is to be a "stiff" season in one sense at least; we have nearly got back to "the dress that stood alone" of which our grandmothers were so proud.

The waist lines are higher than normal, and every gown has a sash or girdle of some sort. These sashes are edged with fringing or trimmed with banded embroidery in cut steel, gold silver or jet beads very small in size. Colored and white rubber beads are also permissible.

A HOLIDAY ROMANCE

BY MRS. WELLESLEY-SMITH

"Paltry reason," gasped Lady Alver.

"Cedric, I implore you to consider what you are doing before it is too late! I never approved of Janet as your wife—she is not in our own station. Now—with an expressive gesture—"it would be social suicide to marry her. No one would know her. She would be ostracized, for the truth would be bound to leak out sooner or later. Be advised—do not follow her! Let her go out of your life forever!"—passionately.

"Mother, it is no use! I love Janet—I always shall do so!"—quietly but firmly.

"Will nothing move you?" exclaimed his mother. "See! I kneel to you my son, and beg of you not to seek this girl—to forget her!"

The cold self-contained woman was completely beside herself. Never had she seen her so moved—so unlike what she had always been. He bent over her and raised her.

"Mother, say no more. You are only distressing yourself unnecessarily. Believe me, I would do a great deal for you, but I cannot allow you to judge for me in this matter."

She uttered no word more of her useless pleadings. Stately as usual, she sought her own rooms, a look of proud despair in her sombre eyes.

Without any very clear idea of her reason for doing so, Janet had gone no further than Totland Bay. The quiet little place appealed to her in her present anguish of mind. She had been fortunate enough to find that the original rooms Sally had engaged before their visit to Lady Alver had been decided on were still vacant, and good Mrs. Rambold had been only too glad to welcome her, though she exclaimed over the girl's white face and lack of appetite, that even the beautiful air of the famed bay did not improve.

All Janet longed for was solitude. She felt that even Sally would be an unbearable just at present; and, knowing that her faithful friend would rush to her side immediately she knew her whereabouts, she purposely refrained from writing.

"My duty is to help him," she said, shuddering, as she sat behind a great rock to rest.

She had waited for some hours to try and outwalk her misery, and had come further than she intended along the beach.

"I must go back by the road. The tide will be coming in," she thought wearily.

The sound of voices near attracted her attention. Janet had a good memory for a voice, and she decided that the throaty accents on the other side of the rock were familiar.

"How long is this farce to be kept up?" growled a second voice.

"Just as long as I choose to pay for it!" was the sharp reply, which the involuntary listener decided was delivered by no less a person than

Mr. Samuel Grabham.

"You pay! Do you think I'm a fool?" came the savage question. "Don't think I tumbled to who was doing the paying? Heaven knows why unless she wants her son to look higher for a wife than my supposed daughter!"

"Supposed daughter!" Janet gasped. Was it possible that Mr. Grabham was talking so the man who had claimed to be her father?

A wild hope rose in her heart, crouching closer she held her breath and listened.

"It is nothing to do with you!" Mr. Grabham said hotly. "All that concerns you is that you're being well paid for a soft job."

"Humph! I'm sorry for the girl! Oh, you may laugh Grabham! I've got a few remnants of decent feeling left in me and I say it's a dirty trick to play on her."

"You were ready enough to do it."

"Granted! When one has come to one's last halfpenny, it's no good being too particular. Don't look alarmed! I'm not going to give you away. I'm ready to act as her father until you've no further use for my services, like the hound I am."

"Talking is easy," sneered Mr. Grabham.

"I haven't come all this way to listen to you moralizing, my friend! What you've got to do now is to get this girl broad, if possible. Play on her feelings! Tell her she'll keep you straight, etc. etc."

"Now about those proofs of my identity that you've been faking, Janet will ask for them when next we have the pleasure of meeting."

"I have them all ready."

The rustling of papers followed.

"You seem extraordinarily well informed as to the girl, and all details concerning her people."

"I am," retorted Mr. Grabham. "Good thing for the success of our little plot. Hallo, what's this—a photograph! What's written beneath 'Como Dalas.' Well he was a handsome man, the image of the girl. Her real father, I take it?"

"Never mind. I didn't know that was there. Give it back to me!"—he snatched it.

"All right. Don't get excited. I no wish to detain it"—laughing.

"We must go back Mr. Grabham said. 'The motor is waiting in the road.'"

"Are you going to tell Lady Alver that, so far, all is well?"—pleasantly. "My dear Grabham, don't frown. I always had a turn for detective work as a boy. I soon nosed out your principle in this matter. Where is that son of hers?"

"Scouring the country for his lady love," Mr. Grabham returned, I've a notion that even a father such as you my friend, has not choked him off. I verily believe he'd marry her tomorrow if he could possibly find her."

QUICK TRIAL, THAT'S ALL

New York, Sept. 16.—Broken in spirit Adolf Rothbarth, representative in America of the hop dealing firm of Rothbarth & Co., who confessed to swindling banks out of nearly $150,000 sent down word from his cell in the Tombs prison today that he "didn't want a lawyer" and that the sooner his trial was over the quicker he could pay the penalty. "All I want is a quick trial," said Rothbarth, who confessed that by means of false reports of credit he had obtained many thousands of dollars from banks to further an unsuccessful stock speculation.

COUNT ZEPPELIN'S BAD LUCK

His Fifth Serious Accident

Baden Baden Sept. 15.—If anything can discourage that intrepid apostle of aerostats, Count Zeppelin yesterday's disaster should do it. The latest model of his aerial invention was torn by the explosion of one of the three motors located in the stern gondola.

Three of the airships crew were seriously injured.

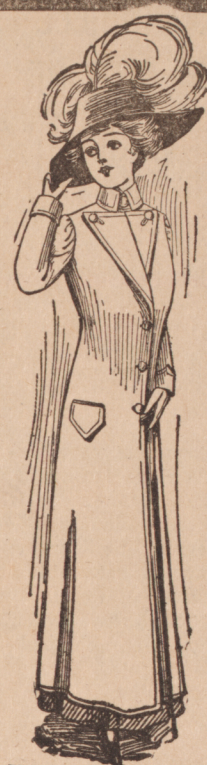

The accident occurred without warning as the dirigible was being slowly worked into her shed here. The defective motor had been operating as usual when suddenly the crew were hurled from their posts in the rear gondolas the craft trembled and lurched. There was a sharp report, followed by flames, and in a moment the immense bulk of silk canvass was aflame. The crew hardly realizing what had happened tumbled over the sides of the airship barely escaping with their lives.

The fire spread so rapidly that the shed was soon destroyed. This is the fifth serious accident which has befallen the Zeppelin dirigibles, the histories of which have been brilliant but brief and usually ending in disaster.

The Zeppelin VI was placed under charter of the Passenger Airship Company having replaced in the passenger service the recently wrecked Deutschland.

She was transferred from Friedrichshafen to this place and after being fitted with improved propeller and other new features, made a trial trip on August 19. She proved to be the speediest of her type and it was announced that she would maintain a speed of 38 miles an hour.

The dirigible was reconstructed to carry ten passengers and during the last few days had made trips to various interesting places. Baron Rudolph Goldschmidt Rothchild had chartered the airship for the use of a private party next Friday. He had agreed to pay $500 for the first two hours of the excursion and $250 for each additional hour occurred.
