THE LESSON OF LIFE

He managed it boldly, after dinner, by taking Miss Gale to walk with him while he went for a cigar, having given her a meaning look which she could not misunderstand, and which made her hasten to accept the invitation. But hurriedly announced that she badly needed a few whiffs of outer air, and that she would delight to go along with them; whereupon Perdue quickly took off his coat and vest and, giving her the latter, asked her if she would not instead, stay at the flat and get some of the lime-spots out of it while they were gone.

She wished to stamp her foot, but could find no good excuse, fitting to be made public, for so doing. It was a miserable old vest, and she knew that he did not care whether or not there were spots on it, and, anyway, he had never before asked of her a service of that menial sort. But she could not well refuse. She took it, fuming inwardly.

As soon as Perdue and the teacher were alone upon the street, he put the matter to her. She could see by his face, revealed by the light of a street-lamp, which they happened to be passing, that he was badly worried; and, indeed, she herself was quite dumfounded when he had told her all.

"Why," she said, "we haven't seen or heard of Link for ages! What can the child be talking of?"

"Then she has met him when you have not known of it," said Perdue, although he tremendously disliked to make such a charge against her.

"I can't believe it," said the teacher.

"What else can you make of it?" he inquired.

"I—I don't know," said the teacher.

Then she had a happy thought.

"He is employed a few blocks down the avenue," she said. "Let's go and see him."

"If you don't mind walking with me when I look so like a tramp—" apologized Perdue.

The teacher knew that the working clothes did not make him look in the least like a tramp. To her he seemed especially strong and admirable in the rough garb. All the teachers were, in a way, in love with Perdue; and she was proud to walk with him.

The store where Link labored for his daily bread was quickly found. Link himself was there, busy at drawing soda-water behind a marble-topped counter. As soon as the little girl whom he was serving had had her "sa's'pilla 'n' cream," he turned to the newcomers.

He was unfeignedly glad to see them, although he seemed a little shy, and insisted that they, too, must have soda-water. He was a bustling little chap, and in two minutes Perdue had started him upon a monologue about himself. He was doing very well, it seemed. They listened to him gravely.

While he talked, a neat little German woman entered. To their amazement, after a moment's hesitation and after a tremendous blush, he brought her over to them and introduced her as his wife.

She was the daughter of the owner of the store, he explained after the first volubility of the introduction had passed, and of course he would, sooner or later, become a partner in the business. She blushed and bridled and said, "Oh, yes-s-s-s," with a pretty little German hiss.

Matters had reached this stage before Mr. Link mustered sufficient courage to ask about Miss Beatrice.

"Yes-s-s," said the chuffy rosy little wife with a good-natured smile, "he used to be in loaf mit her. He tol' me!"

"She is very well," said Perdue, smiling, but puzzled beyond expression by this strange situation.

Miss Gale was beginning to see light. Bat's parody was slowly becoming plain to her, and in her mind there grew a plan of punishment. Perdue—nor any other man—ever would have thought of such a fiendish scheme. It was essentially a woman's punishment for one of her own sex—born of that wisdom of the serpent which woman gained and man was quite unable to assimilate back there in the garden.

The little druggist had said that it was nearly time to close the store.

"Won't you," she said to him and Mrs. Link, "just run around with us to the flat tonight? We'll get some ice cream on the way, and chat over it an hour in the dining room."

Then she appealed especially to Mrs. Link.

Perdue flashed a startled glance at her, but she shook her head. The little druggist and his wife retired behind the screened prescription counter for an instant to discuss the matter, and Miss Gale whispered to Perdue:

"I don't care! She deserves it! I never have been so frightened in all my life before!"

There was an exclamation point at the end of every sentence. Mr. and Mrs. Link emerged and announced that they would, beyond all measure, be pleased to go. The little woman had a simple, pleasant curtsy quite charming. She had evidently retied her husband's necktie, and made him use a whisk-broom to his clothes. Perdue and Miss Gale had heard it swishing.

Had Severe Pains In His Back Could Hardly Work

Mr. Alfred E. Davis, Gorrie, Ont., writes:—"For some years I suffered from severe pains in my back and could hardly work at all, and when I stooped down to pick up anything felt as if my back must break. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, and after taking two boxes I was entirely cured, and feel that I cannot speak too highly in their favor."

"This was nearly four years ago and I still remain cured."

Those who have never been troubled with kidney trouble do not know the suffering and misery which those afflicted undergo.

Weak, lame or aching back comes from the kidneys, and when the kidney becomes deranged.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles. They help the kidneys to flush out the acid and poisonous impurities which have collected, thus clearing out the kidneys, bladder and urinary passages.

Price 50c. per box or 3 for $1.25 at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

ACCEPTED NEW POSITION.

The Chatham Gazette says:—"F.H. Tingley, C. E., who has been one of the engineers for the I. C. R., inspecting the new line into town, has resigned his position with the railway and left on Saturday for St. John, where he will enter the office of the public works department." Mr. Tingley is a U. N. B. graduate, and is well-known in Fredericton.

THE VETO RESOLUTION ISSUE OF ELECTIONS

The issue upon which the battle is to be joined in the old Country will come formally before the House of Lords this week, when the resolutions for the restriction of the Lords' Veto, which were introduced by the Government and adopted by the House of Commons last April, will be discussed. The text of these resolutions, the most momentous in the modern history of British parliamentary government, is as follows:

MONEY BILLS

1.—That it is expedient that the House of Lords be disabled by law from rejecting or amending a Money Bill, but that any such limitation by law shall not be taken to diminish or qualify the existing rights and privileges of the House of Commons.

For the purpose of this resolution a Bill shall be considered a Money Bill if, in the opinion of the Speaker, it contains only provisions dealing with all or any of the following subjects—namely, the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration, or regulation of taxation; charges on the Consolidated Fund or the provision of money by parliament; Supply; the appropriation control of regulation of public money; the raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof; or matters incidental to those subjects or any of them.

OTHER BILLS

II.—That it is expedient that the powers of the House of Lords, as respects Bills other than Money Bills, be restricted by law, so that any such Bill which has passed the House of Commons in three successive sessions, and, having been sent up to the House of Lords at least one month before the end of the session, has been rejected by that House in each of those sessions, shall become law without the consent of the House of Lords on the Royal assent being declared.
