THE LESSON OF LIFE

"Are you better," he inquired, still puzzled.

"I'm quite all right," said she. "It was so silly of me!"

She straightened up, but did not draw away from his arm. There was a feeling in her mind that she had probably said something to betray herself while she had been unconscious.

"Have I—have I been saying anything idiotic?" she inquired.

"You've been saying nothing," he replied.

That was a relief. Suddenly she felt the deep necessity for self-assertion.

"Well," said she, "I thought I saw you fall. It was very dreadful. You know I've always been so sensitive. I fainted, once, when Miss Perkins rocked upon the kitten."

This was a lie.

He dropped his arm and drew it from behind her. She settled over into her corner of the carriage.

"I was afraid," she went on, driven by chagrin at the revelation of her feeling which she felt certain her swoon had made, "that they would want me to look at you after they had picked you up!"

"Bat!" said he.

She felt the deep hurt in his voice; but looked at him quite calmly. He was pale, and it comforted her to think that it was fright for her that had blanched his cheeks. His cap was still in his pocket, his hair was rumpled and his face was streaked with sweat and dust. His clothes were lime-specked and bore many red marks.

The love surged in her as she looked at him, and made her long to reach up and pull his face down to her so that she might wipe it with her handkerchief and then kiss it, or—she made this great concession in her thought—even kiss it first and wipe it afterward. But she fancied as she looked that there was a paternal air in his expression, and the idea brought her resentment back.

"I wonder," she said, as if after grave reflection, "if I should have been expected to wear mourning for my guardian! You are so young to be a guardian—now aren't you?"

Perdue moved angrily.

"Now, see here, Bat," he said sternly, "stop that. There's no reason for your ragging me, and it's indecent. Lord knows I'm glad I did not fall! It was quite close enough. That beam didn't miss me by a mile! It hit the place where I'd been standing!"

Instantly the whole thing flashed before her mind again and, against her will, she shuddered. She put her hand up to his lips and turned her face away. She would have given everything if she could have stopped herself from doing these things.

"Don't!" she choked.

The carriage stopped.

"Here we are at the doctor's," Perdue said. "Are you sure that you are all right now?"

"Oh, yes," she said hurriedly. "It would be absurd to see a doctor. Let's go home."

BURT'S CORNER

Nov. 15.—Mr. N. W. Brown, lecturer for the Dominion Government old age annuities, gave a very interesting and able address at the I. O. F. hall on Tuesday evening at Burt's Corner. Mr. Brown entered largely into the merits of the question, and his elucidations were clear and forcible. A large audience greeted him and were more than pleased. Mr. Elwood Burt acted as chairman and with his usual happy way introduced the speaker Mr. Brown at once entered into the subject matter of his lecture and went through holding the marked attention of his audience.

At the close of Mr. Brown's remarks Rev. H. E. Cooke moved a vote of thanks, which was seconded by Ex-Councillor Alex. Brewer.

Miss Myrtle Lawrence presided at the organ and appropriate music was rendered.

EEL RIVER LAKE.

Nov. 15.—The weather up to last week has been all that could be desired for gathering in the abundant crops of the farmers.

A large congregation attended a very interesting service conducted by Rev. Mr. Shaw on Sunday last. The meetings will continue the following week.

Mr. William Bernard had the misfortune to lose a valuable cow last week, which strayed away from his home and has not yet been found.

Mr. Willie Martin of Union Corner, and Mr. Charlie Saunders are doing a rushing business with their hay press. They are the boys that can do the job up brown.

Mr. John R. Cunningham and son, Eldon, have completed their threshing operations for the season.

Most of our young men have gone to the woods. Our best wishes follow them.

Mrs. John R. Cunningham has returned from Fredericton, where she has been spending a few days with her daughter Annie, who is attending the Normal School.

The touch upon his lips had pacified him. He told the driver, and they started on again.

"Are you sure that they can spare you from your work?" she then asked wickedly.

"Yes," he briefly said. "They'll have to."

"Let's open up the shades and windows and other little things like that, then," she suggested, "and get some air in here and have a drive."

He laughed. He had pulled the shades down tight when he had thought that she was seriously ill to protect her from the view of passers-by. He raised them with a touch and flung the strap that let the windows drop.

"All right," said he.

Presently he looked down, deprecatingly, at his stained clothes. He had not thought of them before.

"But you don't want to drive with any one who looks like this!" he said.

"I do!" she said, and laughed.

He did not know how proud she was of him; how her heart had throbbed as she watched him at his work. He did not know that the stained clothes had been glorified to her into an heroic uniform; that she wished that all the world might see him with her as he was. Then the sight of the falling thing flashed through her mind again and she shuddered.

"What is it!" he inquired.

"Oh, if it had been you!" she said.

He was thinking deeply.

"Would you really have cared very much?" he asked with great studdiness.

"A little," she replied. "And you know I told you that when the kitten—"

"Bat," he said, "keep quiet."

Then they both laughed.

They were still well distant from those portions of the city with which she was familiar. Perdue had been almost as badly frightened, in a way as she had been. He had not had previous experience with fainting maidens. He looked her over anxiously.

In doing so he turned his head and she saw a dried trickle with blood upon the cheek which had hitherto been turned away from her.

"Perdue!" she said. "You're injured!"

Her hands pulled his face around so that she could more clearly see.

He remembered then. One of the broken stays had given him a stinging blow as it went down, but at the same moment he had seen her fall upon the granite block where she had stood, and so he had not even thought of it. He explained to her.

"Then you did forget—for a few minutes!" she said.

"What?" he inquired. "That little cut? Of course. It's nothing."

"No; your work—for me!" said she.

A light began to dawn on him.

"Have I been neglecting you?" he asked.

"Oh, I like it," she protested. "You used to bother me."

He pondered.

MRS. PETER GREEN, Jr.

DESORONTO, ONT.

Says:—"Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is the Best Cough Syrup She Ever Used"

She writes:—"Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is the best cough syrup I ever used. My baby had a very bad cold. I was using Dr. Wood's medicine but that didn't seem to help the awful cough she had until I got a bottle of this great syrup. I have it in the house at the present time for the children and I think I couldn't get along if I didn't have it. I wish to thank you for all the good it has been to my family."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree, which combined with Wild Cherry bark and other pectoral remedies makes it one of the greatest known preparations for Coughs, Colds and all Throat and Lung Troubles.

It is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents at all dealers.

Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Mrs. Margaret McKay, who has been ill for some time, we are glad to say is slowly gaining.

Dr. Coffin of Canterbury passed through here recently to visit the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Farrell, who is seriously ill with pneumonia.

Miss Sadie Copley of Posterville, N. B., is spending a few weeks with Mrs. Edgar Dickinson.

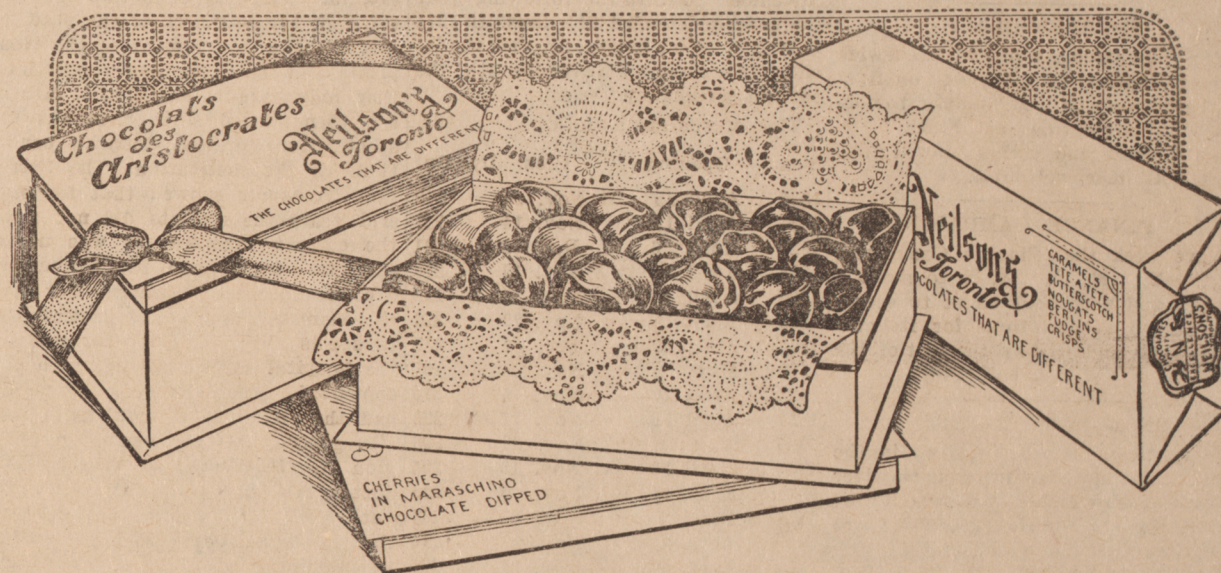

Mrs. Gertrude Cunningham, who has charge of the school at Dead Creek, spent Saturday and Sunday of last week with her parents here.

HERE is something probably that you did not know about Chocolates. The most expensive part of them is the chocolate coating itself. The thinner the chocolate coating, the less expense to the makers, and naturally the less enjoyment to you.

Most makers thin the chocolate with some substitute, so that the cream or hard centers will take up only a very thin jacket of chocolate when dipped.

You will find every piece of Neilson's Confectionery has a thick, heavy coating of the richest, most delicious chocolate—in its absolute purity—you ever tasted.

The centers are coated individually and special care is taken to have the chocolate of just the correct proportion to give that delicate, original flavor so quickly recognized by the connoisseur.

You get something worth eating—something different—something you will always remember with pleasure—when you eat Neilson's Chocolates.
