Think of Last Summer--

You can remember days when the heat inside your kitchen was so great you could hardly bear it. With the right stove you would have made a better hostess. Save your health. Don't put up with the drudgery of a coal range. You can have a clean, cool, pleasant kitchen. The does away with all drudgery of cooking. Why should you be a slave to a coal range when you can have an Oil Cook-Stove that is cheaper than coal, cleaner than coal, doesn't "smell," doesn't smoke, lights instantly, can be put out instantly, leaves no ashes, and doesn't heat the kitchen. With one of these stoves you can boil, bake or roast the most elaborate dinner. You can change from a slow to a quick fire, or the other way about, by simply turning a wick. Apply a match, and instantly the heat from an intense blue flame shoots upward through the turquoise-blue enamel chimneys to the bottom of pot, kettle or oven—but nowhere else. The stove has every convenience that can be thought of: Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping food and dishes hot, drop shelves to hold coffee or teapots, towel rack; in fact every convenience possible.

The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove ornamental and attractive.

HOME RULE IS SAFE SAYS T. P. O'CONNOR

Little Danger that it will be Sacrificed in Conference, Though there is a Feeling that Peace is Almost within Sight-- Distrust Expressed by the Protectionists, who Fear that Tariff Reform may be Thrown Over--Tories Recognize that Position of House of Lords is Indefensible.

T. P. O'Connor cables as follows to The Chicago Tribune from London:—

The conference of the party leaders on the veto question has produced an extraordinary effect in British politics. It overshadows everything and paralyzes and numbs everything. Nobody would believe that the House of Commons in the same place it was a few weeks ago. Then party passion ran higher than for a quarter of a century and in society families and friends were divided by the conflict over the House of Lords as bitter as over the home rule question in 1886.

Now a new spirit reigns and no word of rancor or even spirit heard.

KEEPING BETTER HOURS

The Government is passing its bill at breakneck pace, always avoiding proposing any but the most controversial measures and the House of Commons keeps reasonable hours for the first time for half a century, rising in time for dinner.

Conjectures, rumors, and attitude of mind change with every hour. First the impression is universal that the conference is bound to end rapidly in a hopeless disagreement. This is followed by a strongly sanguine feeling that peace is almost within sight.

Premier Asquith was at first supposed to be giving merely lip-service to the country's and the King's demand for a truce and A. J. Balfour, the Opposition leader, was equally credited with going to the conference with his tongue in his cheek, resolved to give nothing whatever away even in the constitution of the House of Lords.

BOTH SIDES HOPEFUL

Today however, Mr. Asquith is said to share the hopes of David Lloyd-George who last week was the solitary optimist in the Ministerial circles that the conference may end in a settlement. Mr. Balfour is equally credited with readiness to surrender on many points on which everybody expected him to resist to end.

There is some foundation for these sanguine hopes. The Tories now realize that the present House of Lords will no longer be tolerated by the electors of England and they are prepared to meet the coming storm half way by agreeing even to drastic Curiously, however, as the hopes of a peaceful compromise increase, suspicion on the part of the rank and file of both parties increases. The Radicals were hostile at first, then they became sullenly reconciled, but today they have relapsed and are again openly distrustful.

This district finds expression in letters to the newspapers, questions in the House of Commons, and the gradual formation of Parliamentary groups. The protectionist Tories are equally suspicious, thinking Mr. Balfour may attempt to throw over tariff reform.

John Redmond remains in Ireland thus maintaining perfect freedom of action and no responsibility in the conference, but he will arrive in London next Wednesday and his arrival will change the entire situation, he being always the rallying point of the Radicals when the action of the Ministry is suspected of not being sufficiently firm.

HOME RULE IS SAFE

There is little danger that the Liberals will accept anything which would sacrifice home rule, as any such compromise would break up the whole Liberal party. But the situation is a delicate one, and there is some risk that the Liberals may rush into some patched-up compromise which will offend their own supporters.

The chief hope of the conference is the evident recognition by the Tories that there is no present chance of their winning the next election and of the impossibility of any longer defending the House of Lords.

Every politician who enters the conference takes his political life in his hands and it is quite possible that a compromise may end the careers of some of them.

THE STRUGGLE NEARING ITS END

The King remains friendly toward Ireland. He is anxious to ask funds from Parliament with which to establish a permanent royal residence there. Such form of respect to Irish opinion would be premature and mischievous.

The King probably longs, like his father, for the day when he can open the Irish Parliament with the acclamations of the Irish people. The feeling all round is that the struggle is approaching its end.

CONFERENCE PROVES FUTILE FOR NEITHER SIDE WILL GIVE WAY

But Belief Still Continues that Strike by the C. P. R. Men will be Avoided--Union Officials will Confer with the Grand Trunk Men and then Decide in Course of Action.

Montreal, June 27—Nothing resulted from today's conference between representatives of the Canadian Pacific and the trainmen and conductors' unions save an accentuation of the impasse which has been reached. The conference lasted some time, but the representatives of the company practically set their backs to the wall and stood by their position that they would only accept the report of the board of conciliation.

The representatives of the men adhered to their demands of the standard rate of wages for the territory. Each side explained the reasons for their position, and eventually the meeting ended, with no evidences of ill feelings on either side, but no intimation of any inclination to compromise.

While neither side would make any statement as to the position of affairs, the feeling was general amongst the delegates here that there would be no strike. Most of them agreed that the employees did not want a strike, and they all felt pretty sure that the company did not want one. None of the delegates could express any view as to what would be the outcome of the affair, but they all seemed hopeful that it would end in some sort of a compromise.

WILL CONFER WITH GRAND TRUNK TODAY

After the conference between the two sides matters came to a standstill, the union leaders resting on their oars, or getting ready for a further conference which will be held tomorrow morning between them and the officials of the Grand Trunk, when they will present similar demands for standard rates of pay to those already submitted to the C. P. R.

The future course of the men will in all probability be largely guided by the result of this conference, although it is hardly expected that the Grand Trunk will agree to the propositions of the men which would mean a considerably greater increase in their wage expenditure than it would for the Canadian Pacific. It is expected that Vice-President D. McNicoll, of the C. P. R. will be back tomorrow, when he will take charge of the negotiations for that company, but it is hardly likely that this will affect the definite stand taken by Mr. Leonard since the latter has been in constant advisement all the time with Sir Thomas Shaughnessy.

No further conference between the men and the Canadian Pacific representatives has been arranged, but it was stated tonight by the leaders of the trainmen that it is quite probable a further meeting will be arranged in an effort to make an amicable adjustment. This, however, can only be arrived at by one side or

THREE THOUSAND LIVES LOST IN U. S. MINES DURING LAST YEAR

List of Injured for the Year Makes a New Record--Nearly Eight Thousand--Chief Causes of Accidents are Falls of Coal and Premature Explosions.

New York, June 25—The recently issued statistics of coal mining casualties in the United States, compiled by the Geological Survey for the calendar year 1909, show an apparent falling off in fatalities during the year, but since the special bulletin on the subject, made public today, states that no account is taken of the year's greatest disaster, that at Cherry, Ill., in November last, the facts are that 1909 was exceeded only by 1907 as one of heavy catastrophes. The report explains that the toll of the Cherry mine disaster is not counted in with the year's figures because it will not be reported by the Illinois officials until the close of the fiscal year in June.

The Government depends for its information in all but four States on the reports of the local officials, and although last year four more States—Georgia, Oregon, Texas and Virginia—were added to the figures through reports received from the operators, the returns are still far from complete, a situation which will be relieved, the report points out, when the newly established Bureau of Mines is completely organized.

Last year, leaving out the Cherry mine disaster, in which 393 miners and rescuers were burned to death or suffocated, there were 2,412 deaths from coal mine accidents, against 2,450 in 1908, and 3,125 in 1907, the most disastrous year in mining history in this country. This disaster brings the total of fatalities in 1909 up to 2,805.

In making comparison with previous years, however, the Government officials point out that in the four States not previously reporting last year's fatalities numbered 34.

The list of injured in last year's mining operations make a new record the total of 7,979 reported, being an increase of 1,200 over 1908, which in its turn exceeded 1907 in non-fatal injuries by 1,400. Much of the increase in the lists of injured is more apparent than real, and is due, the report says, to the increased number of States included in the figures. In 1907, for instance, there were only seventeen States reporting, while in 1909 there were twenty-six.

The one actual improvement shown in the report is the decrease of accidents in the anthracite mines of Pennsylvania, where 1,034 men were injured in 1909, against 1,170 in 1908, and 1,379 in 1907. Accidents that were not fatal increased in the bituminous fields from 2,947 in 1907 to 5,602 in 1908, and 6,945 in 1909.

The chief causes of accidents, the report states, are not gas and dust explosions, as is properly supposed, but falls of coal, due chiefly to careless blasting or insufficiently supported roofs, and premature explosions. Only 14 per cent. of the deaths and 5 per cent. of the injuries reported last year were due to explosions of dust or gas.

the other, or both, giving way from their present firm attitude.

FINAL APPEAL TO SHAUGHNESSY

A final effort to settle the differences between the trainmen and conductors of the C. P. R. and the company was made this evening, when they sent an appeal to Sir Thomas Shaughnessy as a result of their conference with Mr. Leonard and other representatives.

P. Berry, of the Conductors' Brotherhood, stated tonight that the result of the conference had been simply to emphasize the stand of the company on their previous decision to accept the finding of the board of conciliation. This, he said, the men would not accept, and they had now made an appeal to Caesar, by writing to the president of the C. P. R. In the letter the union representatives set out that they thought their claims had not been given fair consideration by the company, and they would take no further steps until Sir Thomas had been given time to look into the matter and give them an answer.

P. Berry, however, intimated that the trainmen had no idea of abating their demands, and that should the company persist in its present stand "an issue would be made." According to his statement the prospects for trouble are more imminent than before the conference, since no more has been taken by the C. P. R. without the concurrence of Sir Thomas Shaughnessy.

Give your servants GOLD DUST to clean with, treat them rightly and you will have few occasions to insert a "help wanted" ad

They say a good workman is known by his tools. You cannot expect your maid to keep everything ship-shape unless you give her every modern help. To keep house without GOLD DUST is to do work by hard, old-fashioned methods. For cleaning everything and anything about the house—from cellar to attic—GOLD DUST is worth its weight in gold. It cuts grease and dirt like magic, does away with scouring and scrubbing, and saves time and tempers.

Your servant can do more and better work and keep sweet with the aid of GOLD DUST in all household cleaning.
