THE FACTS OF THE CASE

Gov. Martin D. Ansel of South Carolina and Gov. W. W. Kitchen of North Carolina met the other day at Louisville, Ky., and issued the following joint statement:

"It has been the legend that the governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina: 'It is a long time between drinks.' No such statement was ever made. The facts as told by an eye witness of that famous meeting brands the whole story as a fabrication. This is what really happened:

"The governor of North Carolina said to the governor of South Carolina: 'Remember the fate of Montgomery?'

"Well, who in the hell was Montgomery?" asked the governor of South Carolina.

"He was the man who died between drinks," replied the governor of North Carolina."

SOME INTERESTING STORIES IN NATURAL HISTORY

(By M. Quad.)

A crow had a nest in an oak. And his life went along with a poke. He'd a wife to advise And talk to him wise And indulge now and then in a joke

Up to thirty years ago the crow was to be found in thousands in every state east of the Mississippi river. Then the farmers began to thin him out, and there are many localities where he can no longer be found. Naturalists call him the most useless bird on earth. He isn't handsome to look at, he has the hardest kind of a voice, he is destructive, and he is not food for man. It is a matter of wonder why he was created at all.

That crow had the pick of the land. There was always plenty at hand. From sunrise to set

He was eating, you bet.

And his way it was balmy and bland. The crow will eat most any kind of meat and any kind of seeds. He will snap up a long, oyster or clam. No matter how rank or rancid his food is, he enjoys it. Let a farmer plant an acre of corn and leave it unwatched for a day and a flock of crows will scratch up every kernel. It was to scare the crows away that old suit of clothes stuffed with straw were first placed in fields. The bird's appetite is so good he will gobble down a quart of shelled corn at one time. The agricultural bureau estimates that every crow damages the farmer $10 worth during the season. It's in the winter season that the bird has a hard time, and many freeze and starve to death.

No shotgun was pointed at him As he sat on the fence or a limb, No club broke his neck, No stone did him wreck, But he suddenly took up aw him.

FUNNY END OF LAW SUIT

A curious lawsuit took place in the state of Ohio some five years ago on account of the crows. The farmers of a certain county were pledged not to feed them during the winter, thus leaving them to die, but a certain man with a kind heart bought many bushels of corn and invited the crows to come and feast three times a day. There were days when a thousand crows assembled and when their cawing could be heard for a mile or more. They got through the winter all right, but the good man who made it possible had ten lawsuits for damages. The matter hung in the courts for a long time, but it was finally decided that as there was no law against killing a crow there could be none against saving his life.

His song was a far-reaching caw, Like a spike that is grated by saw. 'Twas a caw and a screech, And a mile it did reach, And 'twas not forbidden by law.

A German naturalist named Breitz started out a few years ago to make a songster of the crow. He took young ones and slit their tongues and put them in cages with canaries and other singing birds, and for a time he thought he would be successful. Then when the young crows got their voices it proved to be something more shrill and screechy than the notes of their fathers and mothers. The crow isn't born with the right kind of throat for a warbler.

The whim that got into his head Was, instead of going to bed, To sing with all hail, Like the sweet nightingale, And tickle the old farmer Jed.

It was believed for a long time by naturalists that the crow could be taught to talk as well as or better than a parrot. Men spent months acting as teachers, but all they ever got out of Jim Crow was his caw. He was keeping quiet and letting them do the talking. Many of them were put in cages with parrots, but the parrots did all the swearing.

"It never can be," said the wife. "You're no singer, you bet your crow life."

The farmer will scoff, The gun will go off, And there'll be a row and a strife."

Russia is the country of crows. Some thirty years ago a duke offered a reward of $1,000 to cook crow so that the peasants would like the meat. Russian, French and German cooks competed. They baked, boiled, stuffed and made potpie of Mr. Crow, and they used all sorts of seasonings to make him taste like chicken or turkey, but after experimenting for weeks he was still crow and nobody would eat him. A dog might get hungry enough to pick the bird's bones, but it is known that a fox turns away from them with a wry face. "I'm running this singing, my dear, I've filed up my voice, And I'll make him rejoice And bring out his wife for to hear."

As bad as men dislike the crow they give him credit for his cuteness. In a locality where they have been shot at no sooner does a man appear with a gun than the crow is away at his best speed. The same man can walk out with a stick on his shoulder and the bird will give him no attention whatever. He knows what's bad for him, and in that he is ahead of most human beings. The noise of a brass band will drive every crow away within hearing. In that he has advantage over man. Man wants to get away from the music, but has no wings to fly with.

And he went as the gloaming drew night, And he sang from a maple tree high. 'Twas a screech and a caw, A sort of haw, haw! As if reaching up for the notes.

As to the longevity of the crow, he has been known to live twenty years, or as long as a goose, but in most cases crows die under the age of five years. They get tired of their own voices and want a change.

He was warbling away like a band When Jed, with a gun in his hand, Came out, and he fired. Be-caws he was tired, And down came the crow in the sand.

And when he didn't return home that night Mrs. Crow went looking for her own breakfast and said, "If he's a nightingale he's surely a dead un."

If a small piece of zinc is burned in with the coal occasionally it will coat the interior of the chimney so that soot will not form upon it.

Do not rub fabrics roughly between the hands when cleansing them. It will be found sufficient to rub the cleansing fluid in gently with a fresh cloth.

Some women would eat pre-digested sawdust if it was labeled "complexion beautifier."

Ahyay, a woman can sharpen a pencil just as gracefully as a man can thread a needle.
