WILL JESSE BURKETT BE ST. LOUIS MANAGER

Worcester, July 28.—St. Louis looks good to manager Jesse C. Burkett of the Worcester baseball club next year as a place where he can show his managerial ability.

While Burkett will not state his position definitely, he practically admitted today, that he has under consideration an offer to become the manager of the St. Louis Browns.

When the question was put to him directly if he had not received an offer to go to St. Louis, he replied, "I have a contract with the Worcester club that does not expire until Sept. 12 and I will not do any business until after that date."

A friend of Burkett is authority for the statement that he is certain the Worcester manager will be in St. Louis next season.

St. Louis, July 28.—Pres. Hedges of the St. Louis Browns, when shown the story sent out from Worcester to the effect that Jesse Burkett of the Worcester New England league team may manage the Browns next season, threw a bucket of ice water

SEAWANHAKA CUP

WILL STAY IN THE
UNITED STATES

St Lawrence Failed to Furnish Course Yesterday Giving Final Race to Defending Yacht.

Manchester, Mass., July 28.—The Seawanhaka cup for 21 rater yachts stays in the States, for its defender, the Massachusetts, of the Manchester Yacht Club, out sailed and outdrifted the Canadian challenger, St. Lawrence, of the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Club, in the third and final race today. After a futile effort to follow the Massachusetts a third time round the four mile triangle, the St. Lawrence withdrew, and hauling back to the finish, helped to celebrate the victory of her opponent. It was one of the few times that a losing yacht has hailed a winner at the finish line.

The Massachusetts pulled out ahead from the start, and after establishing a lead of a mile, was content until the wind began to fail, and then for the first time the race became really exciting, for it was a question whether the Massachusetts would be able to finish within the time limit. She struggled round the last turn against a feeble head breeze, and started on the last leg of a mile and a third with just wind enough to keep her sails full. Half way in the wind all fell down completely, and with forty minutes more the defender had half a mile to go and not a breath to push her. The tide had just begun to turn against the yacht and the minutes were ticking off like a referee counting time over a prostrate boxer.

Slowly the Yankee yacht flapped along, and with a puff here and another there finally rolled over the finish line with 27 minutes and five seconds to spare. The margin looked big but it was an extremely narrow one today, and the four tars on the Massachusetts heaved a sigh of relief at their victory over father time. The St. Lawrence was three miles and a half astern.

The Massachusetts finished the race at 4:12.55, having covered the twelve miles in two hours, two minutes, fifty-five seconds.

The St. Lawrence was a third of the way to the first mark on the third round, when she withdrew.

AMERICA ONLY SHARES WITH BRITAIN FISHING RIGHTS IN ATLANTIC

Reply to U.S. Argument—Sir William Robson, for Great Britain, Calls American Claims 'Incompatible.'

The Hague, July 27.—Sir William Robson in dealing with the American assertion before the Fisheries Tribunal today that the treaty of 1818 accorded them sovereignty in British territorial waters, maintained that the historic arguments put forward by Americans in support of their claim that the treaty accorded them international "servitude."

He proceeded to argue that if the United States had the right to decide whether the legislation of British colonies concerning fisheries were reasonable the Arbitration Tribunal could never examine whether the United States had refused rightly or wrongly to recognize such legislation. He opposed the American view that such laws were unnecessary for the protection of the fisheries and the preservation of the fish.

He argued that before 1783 fishermen in the British colonies, which formed the United States up to 1785, were everywhere subjected to the laws and regulations regarding fishing. The treaty "accorded" to Americans the same right as they had formerly to come to fish subject to local regulations. That right had not been increased by their independence and in the course of the negotiations for the treaty of 1818 the United States had recognized that Great Britain had exclusive jurisdiction in those waters. In the treaty the United States had not been given a share in the fisheries as a co-proprietor with Great Britain, but only the "liberty and permission to fish in common." That is to say, under the same conditions as British fishermen.

MEN WHO KNOW

"I find the keeping of individual cow records very useful indeed, and would not go back again to the guessing method," writes a farmer who has tried both ways.

The men who just guess and who do not know what each cow in the herd gives during the year, often guess too much on the weight of milk and fat, and too little on the cost of feed. They guess that "Polly" is the best cow in the herd, but they do not know, because they have not weighed or tested the milk on any system. Probably "Buttercup" is far ahead of "Polly" as a producer.

The men who know the best cows in the herd, those who know which cows produce a large quantity at a low cost are the men who not only get good satisfaction out of keeping good cows, but they are the men who get good money when they sell, because they have records to augment the value. The men who know the poor cows by their records sell them off for beef and save time, and labor, and feed, and stable room, and bad language. The men who know enough to select good cows on their records of production are the successful dairy men today. The Dairy Division, Ottawa, supplies record forms for milk and feed so that men can soon know what profit each cow pays. The question is not "What does the herd average this month or next?" but, "What does each cow give during the year?" Each cow should be a "long distance" milker.
