RE-CONSTRUCTION IS THE PRINCIPAL THEME AT CAMPBELLTON NOW

Judge McLatchey Refers to the Chief
Needs of the Situation—Cash Badly
Wanted, if any Good is to be Done
Before the Winter Sets in.

Campbellton July 21.—The principal subject at present occupying the attention of the people is that of reconstruction. The matter is receiving the earnest consideration of the Finance Committee of which Judge McLatchey is the chairman. On the subject His Honor said in the course of an interview today.

"We must have houses to save the lives of those who lost everything else in the world.

"If Campbellton is to be rebuilt, the working people who have lived here must rebuild. But it will be impossible to keep them here unless some provision is made to house them through the winter.

"We have mapped out a plan by which we think it will be possible to accomplish something. Food is of less pressing need now. The wholesale houses have already started to rush in supplies and it soon will be possible to buy almost any kind of food or clothing.

"We propose to help the poor who have lost all; they will be given work and in return paid by the town committees at first in food and clothing checks and later in money.

HIS HONOR JUDGE McLATCHEY
Chairman Campbellton Finance Committee.

"Any workman who has something with which to start will be assisted, and those who have absolutely nothing will be housed in the dwellings the committees will set them to building. "We must keep our laboring classes here. If they have no place to live through a winter that is as cold as 38 below they will move. We wish to provide these houses, but it will be impossible without a great deal of outside assistance.

"At least $100,000 is necessary. The place is not so large that we don't know almost everyone and it will be easy to apply permanent relief effectively, without waste and without offensive, mechanical charity."

LITTLE CHANGE REPORTED

There is but little change in the situation here today. Ideal weather conditions prevail and from early morning until midnight of each day men and even women are hard at work in patching up temporary shelters, establishing sinks about the streets of tents and through the business section. Steadily the work goes on, with a tenacity and determination of purpose that merits the admiration of all. There is hardly a cessation for meals. Labor is already scarce and is one of the problems which will have to be met.

The problem of sanitation is another matter that is still looming large. No more sickness has been discovered and the fever cases in the hospital are being cared for. The doctors in charge of the health are busy inspecting the removal of garbage.

COMMUNICATION RE-ESTABLISHED.

The telegraph office is just beginning to catch up with the rush of business. Their wires are in better shape, although the instruments are almost in the open. There is still a stack of messages from outside which it has been impossible to deliver.

Telephone communication has been reopened with Dalhousie, 15 miles east and with Matapedia 13 miles west. The exchange is put in a tent and as yet there have been but 20 instruments installed in the town, all in the business houses.

With the re-establishment of communication of a more regular sort, the people have been flocking back into the town. It has become a frequent sight that of mother and daughter wandering through the ruin strewn streets, at last finding the spot where once stood their home, now so unrecognizable as to be almost impossible to find.

WATER TRANSPORTATION WILL BE AN IMMENSE ADVANTAGE TO FARMERS

The Western Provinces Have Admirable
Natural Facilities for Water Carriage, which can Readily be Adapted to Met the Needs of the Community.

Hudson's Bay is the receptacle of the rainfall over a very large area extending from the source of the Rainy River in the east to the Rocky Mountains in the west, and from the source of the Red River in the south to the mouth of the Nelson River in the north. The Rainy and Winnipeg Rivers are too rough and the Red River is too shallow and tortuous to be of much use for transportation purposes, but there is reason to believe that a continuous navigable stretch of fifteen hundred miles, from Winnipeg to a point a hundred miles beyond Edmonton, is perfectly feasible: The completion of the St. Andrew's lock on the Red River has made available three hundred miles of uninterrupted waterway.

According to the statement of Dr. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works, a great deal of information has already been collected by surveying parties sent out by the Dominion Government. They have ascertained that the amount of lockage on the Saskatchewan River would be comparatively small: one lock at Grand Rapids, where the river enters Lake Winnipeg, and perhaps two other locks would suffice, with wing dams and dredging to make the Saskatchewan navigable for capacious vessels of light draft.

It is hardly necessary to point out that if so long a navigable stretch served no very useful purpose as a water transportation system it might still be justifiable as a regulator and moderator of railway traffic rates. It would for a great part of the way be close to the National Transcontinental and Canadian Northern routes and for a shorter distance it would be not very far from the Canadian Pacific Railway. It would traverse a magnificent expanse of agricultural land and facilitate its settlement. Not the least of its merits would be the important addition it would make to the scenic character of the West. A voyage on a river steamer for fifteen hundred miles or for any considerable part of that distance would add a very desirable sort of variety to the tourist's ordinary experience in travelling across the continent by train.

Dr. Pugsley makes no mistake in attaching great importance to the water-power that would be incidentally developed by the construction of dams and locks for navigation purposes. The works at Grand Rapids would make available between eighty thousand and a hundred thousand horsepower of hydro-electric energy which might be transmitted through the two hundred and fifty miles to Winnipeg; a considerable part of it might be used at or near Grand Rapids itself which will be a convenient spot for the assembling of pulp wood for the manufacture of paper and of wheat for the manufacture of flour, both for export by way of Hudson's Bay when the railway thither is completed.

BOY ANARCHIST

HURLED A BOMB

Naples, July 21.—A boy of thirteen declared to be a full fledged and fanatical anarchist, hurled a bottle bomb at the Duke of Aosta today while the prince was leisurely proceeding through the street in his automobile. The bottle just missed the royal head glancing along the side of the furnishings of the car, which prevented its smashing when it touched the pavement.

Native New Yorkers should not grow conceited over the city's record, for 70 per cent. of the couples that have applied for licenses this year have been foreign born.

WEDDED IN A TENT

Maud Nickerson and John McCarthy, two of the younger Campbellton people who lost their all, were married in a tent on Patterson Hill by the Rev. Mr. Coleman of the Episcopal church. The wedding was very quiet attended only by a few of their intimate friends. McCarthy is a drug clerk, his bride is the daughter of a small hotel keeper. The couple have gone to Athol Mills, and after a short honeymoon will go to Winnipeg to live.

AMERICAN MERCHANT ASSIGNED BUSINESS OVER TO HIS WIFE

Who Then Brought an Action Against Him to Compel Him to Work for Her—He Now Advises Other Men to Take Warning by His Example.

New York, June 21.—"Never," says Hans Mahler, "never sign anything over to your wife, or you may have a woman for a boss all your life, unless you resign as I did."

When Hans came to this country in 1905 he established the firm of Hans Mahler & Co., dealers in imported confections, at No. 41 East Ninth St. The company was incorporated with a capital of $50,000, and Hans went to Germany and sold a lot of the stock. The business flourished.

Then, Hans says, in a moment of uncertain mental condition, he signed the entire business over to his wife.

"Right away she put me on a $15 a week salary," says Hans, "I protested that that was not enough to buy smoking tobacco and beer and to play an occasional game of pinocle with my friends at 25 cents a corner. I asked if she would not start me on a little more—say $20 a week—but she said that $15 was enough so long as I had to pay no board. Well, I had to be satisfied. I thought that she would not be strict and that a little loose change might come my way once in a while. But I was wrong. She organized the accounts so that every penny had to be accounted for. I got my $15—no more, no less.

"One day I went out and got some courage. I returned and asked for a raise in salary. You would think I was asking for her heart's blood. She told me I was under contract to work for her at $15 a week, and that she would see that I lived up to the contract. I was feeling strong. My nerve was fine, so I threw up my job. My wife laughed at me.

"Go ahead," she said, "you will be back soon when you find you have got only no job but no home."

Hans went over to the Maldern Importing Company, also dealers in imported confections and the biggest rivals of the Hans-Mahler Company. He made application for a position and they put him to work immediately. He became invaluable to the Maldern Importing Company. They liked him and met his wants as to salary, hours and amount of work expected of him. Hans was getting along splendidly, and every day he would look in at his wife's store and pass the time of day. He observed on these occasions that the Hans-Mahler store was sorely in need of a manager, and he churked with satisfaction. Mrs. Mahler fretted. Then she consulted Lawyer Theodore A. Rich.

Justice Bischoff, in the Supreme Court, listened to argument yesterday. Charles A. Riegelman appeared for Hans, and the Maldern Importing Company had as counsel Fulton McMahon. The first thing Mr. McMahon did was to ask that his client be eliminated from the case, on the ground that it was not concerned in the affair between Mahler and his wife.

Lawyer Riegelman said that Mahler was the real owner of Hans-Mahler & Co., although a majority of the stock was in his wife's name. He denied all of Mrs. Mahler's allegations with regard to the provisions of her contract with her husband.

Mrs. Mahler, through her counsel, asked that the Maldern Importing Company be restrained from employing her husband. Justice Bischoff took the papers and reserved decision.

MONEY HUNG OUT ON CLOTHESLINE TO DRY

Bills Got Soaked when Woman Went in to Swim, But They Came Around All Right
After Sun-Bath.

Vancouver, July 20.—Out in one of the suburbs, an odd sight on a clothesline a few days ago was a week's washing of $5 bills, pinned on a line to dry, which was the result of a bath which Mrs. Daniel Townsend took and in which no one can understand why the money did not drift out to sea. Mrs. Townsend, in taking a surf bath did not remove that portion of her apparel which the average woman uses as her pocket-book.

During the bath the surf played its usual pranks, and although the bands used to hold the money in place were several times loosened, the money was found intact, although reduced almost to a pulp when Mrs. Townsend started to remove the bathing apparel. It took several hours of careful drying on an improvised line before the bills were in shape to be taken to a bank and redeemed for more substantial ones.

Three houses in Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, London, which were built not long after the Great Fire, are to be demolished.
