DOMINION PARLIAMENT TO CONVENE NEXT WEEK

The Recent Bye-Election in Drummond-- Arthabaska and its Significance--Bourassa's Agitation a Direct Effort to Undo the Great Work of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Ottawa, Nov. 8.--Parliament will be formally opened on the 8th of this month, and with it the principal underlying the recent success of the Nationalist party in the Drummond-Arthabaska by-election will furnish a topic for conversation in political circles, in the lobbies, and in the rotunda of every hotel in the city. Though in an embryonic state, and though it ceases to occupy the mind of distant Canadian cities to the exclusion of everything else as it has during the past week, the question will be a living one here. Prominent Liberals and Conservatives alike have for the time being lost sight of their party distinctions in an effort to fathom the significance of the Bourassa-Monk policy which seems to have fanned into fire an undesirable spirit of national discontent, which, if fostered, bids fair to initiate an era of national and religious war that must eventually undo the colossal work of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the champion of a United Canada, an independent self-governing unit in the British Empire. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has returned to the Capital. He is seen going to and from his office in the Parliament Buildings daily at the regular hours. Yet a heavy cloud seems to have shrouded the magnificence of Parliament Hill. It would appear that the Premier feels the character of the attitude of his native province more keenly than any other man in the city, with the possible exception of Mr. Borden himself. Strangely enough, some imagine that Mr. Borden is in a happy frame of mind. Such, however, is anything but the truth. Suppose for instance that Sir Wilfrid should resign. Could Mr. Borden collect himself sufficiently to form a government? Could he reconcile the warring factions in Quebec? Would Messrs. Bourassa and Monk support Mr. Borden in his naval policy? One would hardly think so. A leading Conservative paper in this city, The Evening Journal, whose editor, Mr. P. D. Rose, is admitted by all parties to be a man of remarkably sane judgment, stated in an editorial Nov 4th, that the triumph of the Bourassa candidate meant a defeat not of the Laurier naval policy alone, but of the Borden naval policy as well. The Nationalists are opposed to any action calculated either to assist in defending the British Empire or for purely Canadian self-defence. Mr. Borden is in a more difficult position than Sir Wilfrid. Mr. Borden is numb on the question. It is true that he gave an interview on the result of the by-election in an effort to lead the people to believe that the triumph of the Bourassa candidate was indirectly a victory for the Conservative party. That is an illusion pure and simple. The fact is that the Conservative party should have put a candidate in the field to expound the Borden naval policy, which is as directly opposite to the Bourassa platform as the Laurier naval policy is. Mr. Borden does not even suggest why his party did not have a candidate in the field. It is evident that a Conservative candidate in that campaign could not have had a ghost of a chance. The only inference, then, is that the Conservative party lacked courage. They stood aside and left the battle in which they should have taken an active part entirely with Sir Wilfrid, who, after all, was the only man that had the courage of his convictions, and who, though he lost the cause in this one instance stood to the helm and surely merits the esteem, gratitude and the undivided support of every apostle of a United Canada. Over and above the fact that the election resulted in a victory for the Nationalist party, let us revert to the issue itself. Mr. Bourassa is opposed to the Imperialist idea. He is equally opposed to any action on the part of the Government tending to uphold even local navy defence. Apparently Mr. Bourassa would discourage anything that would in any way contribute to the upbuilding of a United Canada, even for Canadians. Then we might ask, 'Where does Mr. Bourassa propose leading the people of Quebec? What is the goal of his ambitions? In what does the salvation of the French-Canadians consist?' As opposed to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's policy of peace and conciliation and the welding of the two races, let us see where Mr. Bourassa's policy will lead us. All men cherishing the hope, and acting upon principles having for their object the unity of Canada, feel forced into the question:--Does Mr. Bourassa sincerely believe that by fostering a spirit of discontent among his compatriots, he is furthering the cause of a United Canada, an independent self-governing unit within the Empire? If not, he is in plain words, a traitor to his country and to the best interests of his own people. Mr. Bourassa himself acknowledges that he is opposed to annexation with the United States. The reason for this we believe to be the fact that such action would mean the death of French Canada. It might be added too, that the United States would require more of us towards the support of their navy than either Laurier or Borden are asking of us. Finally, then, we ask:--Does Mr. Bourassa favor absolute independence? Most assuredly not. That would mean that we would have to pay tenfold more for our defence, and there would be the additional danger of the French language being consumed by English-speaking Canada. There would also be a prospect, after the British North America Act would cease to be in force, of non-sectarian schools being established throughout the country. Realizing now that Mr. Bourassa is opposed to the present state of Canada as a unit of the Empire and therefore to the principle that Canada should contribute her share to the defence both of herself and that of the Empire; and moreover, that he is opposed to annexation or absolute independence, we are forced to ask for Mr. Bourassa's real platform, if he has any. But he does not hold out any definite hope to his people unless it be that of eventually breaking up the Dominion and the forming of an independent French colony in Canada. If this final aim is not the hope that Mr. Bourassa is holding out to his followers, then we can only conclude that he is leading his compatriots into a blind campaign of discontent for purely personal purposes. This policy cannot but be fatal to all conceivable conceptions of a United Canada. Perhaps the most deplorable phase of this blind agitation is the fact that it is a direct effort to undo the great work Sir Wilfrid Laurier has accomplished for Canada. Every sane Canadian, be he French or English speaking, Liberal or Conservative, and of whichever creed, must admit that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has done more to bring about amicable relations between the two great races in Canada than any other man in the history of the country. Even Sir John Macdonald could not have held the races together were it not for the loyal support he received from Sir George Etienne Cartier. Sir Wilfrid Laurier stands alone in this regard. He has no equals! He alone has been able to stand as the Premier of a United Canada. He is a statesman, and we class him under the same category that we class the late Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Borden makes a plausible effort to accomplish similar results, but fails. Bourassa and Monk cannot be classed with Laurier, Macdonald, Borden and Cartier. Laurier and Borden, in this age, are statesmen; Bourassa and Monk are among the narrowest of our French-Canadian extremists. They owe their present popularity in Quebec to a purely national cry which in itself, will eventually defeat its own end, and decree a stigma upon its leaders that will forever blot their names from the enviable role of distinguished Canadian statesmen. The question will occupy the political arena for some time after the opening of Parliament, to the exclusion of other matters of importance. Mr. Gilbert, the National member, will surely be expected to throw some light on the subject as to the real policy of his party.

A ST. JOHN CASE.

Globe: At the afternoon session of the police court, John Allen charged with obtaining money on false pretences, was again remanded. Mr. H. D. Puddington gave evidence that he had given Allen $2 to purchase a ticket to Fredericton, and saw him to the train started and later tried to secure a refund on the ticket. Detective Killen testified that Allen had borrowed $20 from Bishop Richardson and only repaid $5. He also gave evidence of Allen's police court record showing that he had been arrested several times.
